

THE SAGAMORE OF SACO.

DY MRS. E. OAKES SHUTH.

HEADLE & CO., 118 WILLIAM STREET, NEW YORK, T. R. Callender, cor. 3d & Walnut, Phils.

THE SWAINP SCOUT.

BY W. J. HAMILTON.

AUTHOR OF "PEDDLER SPY," "SHAWNEES' FOE," "THE HUNCHBACK," ETC.

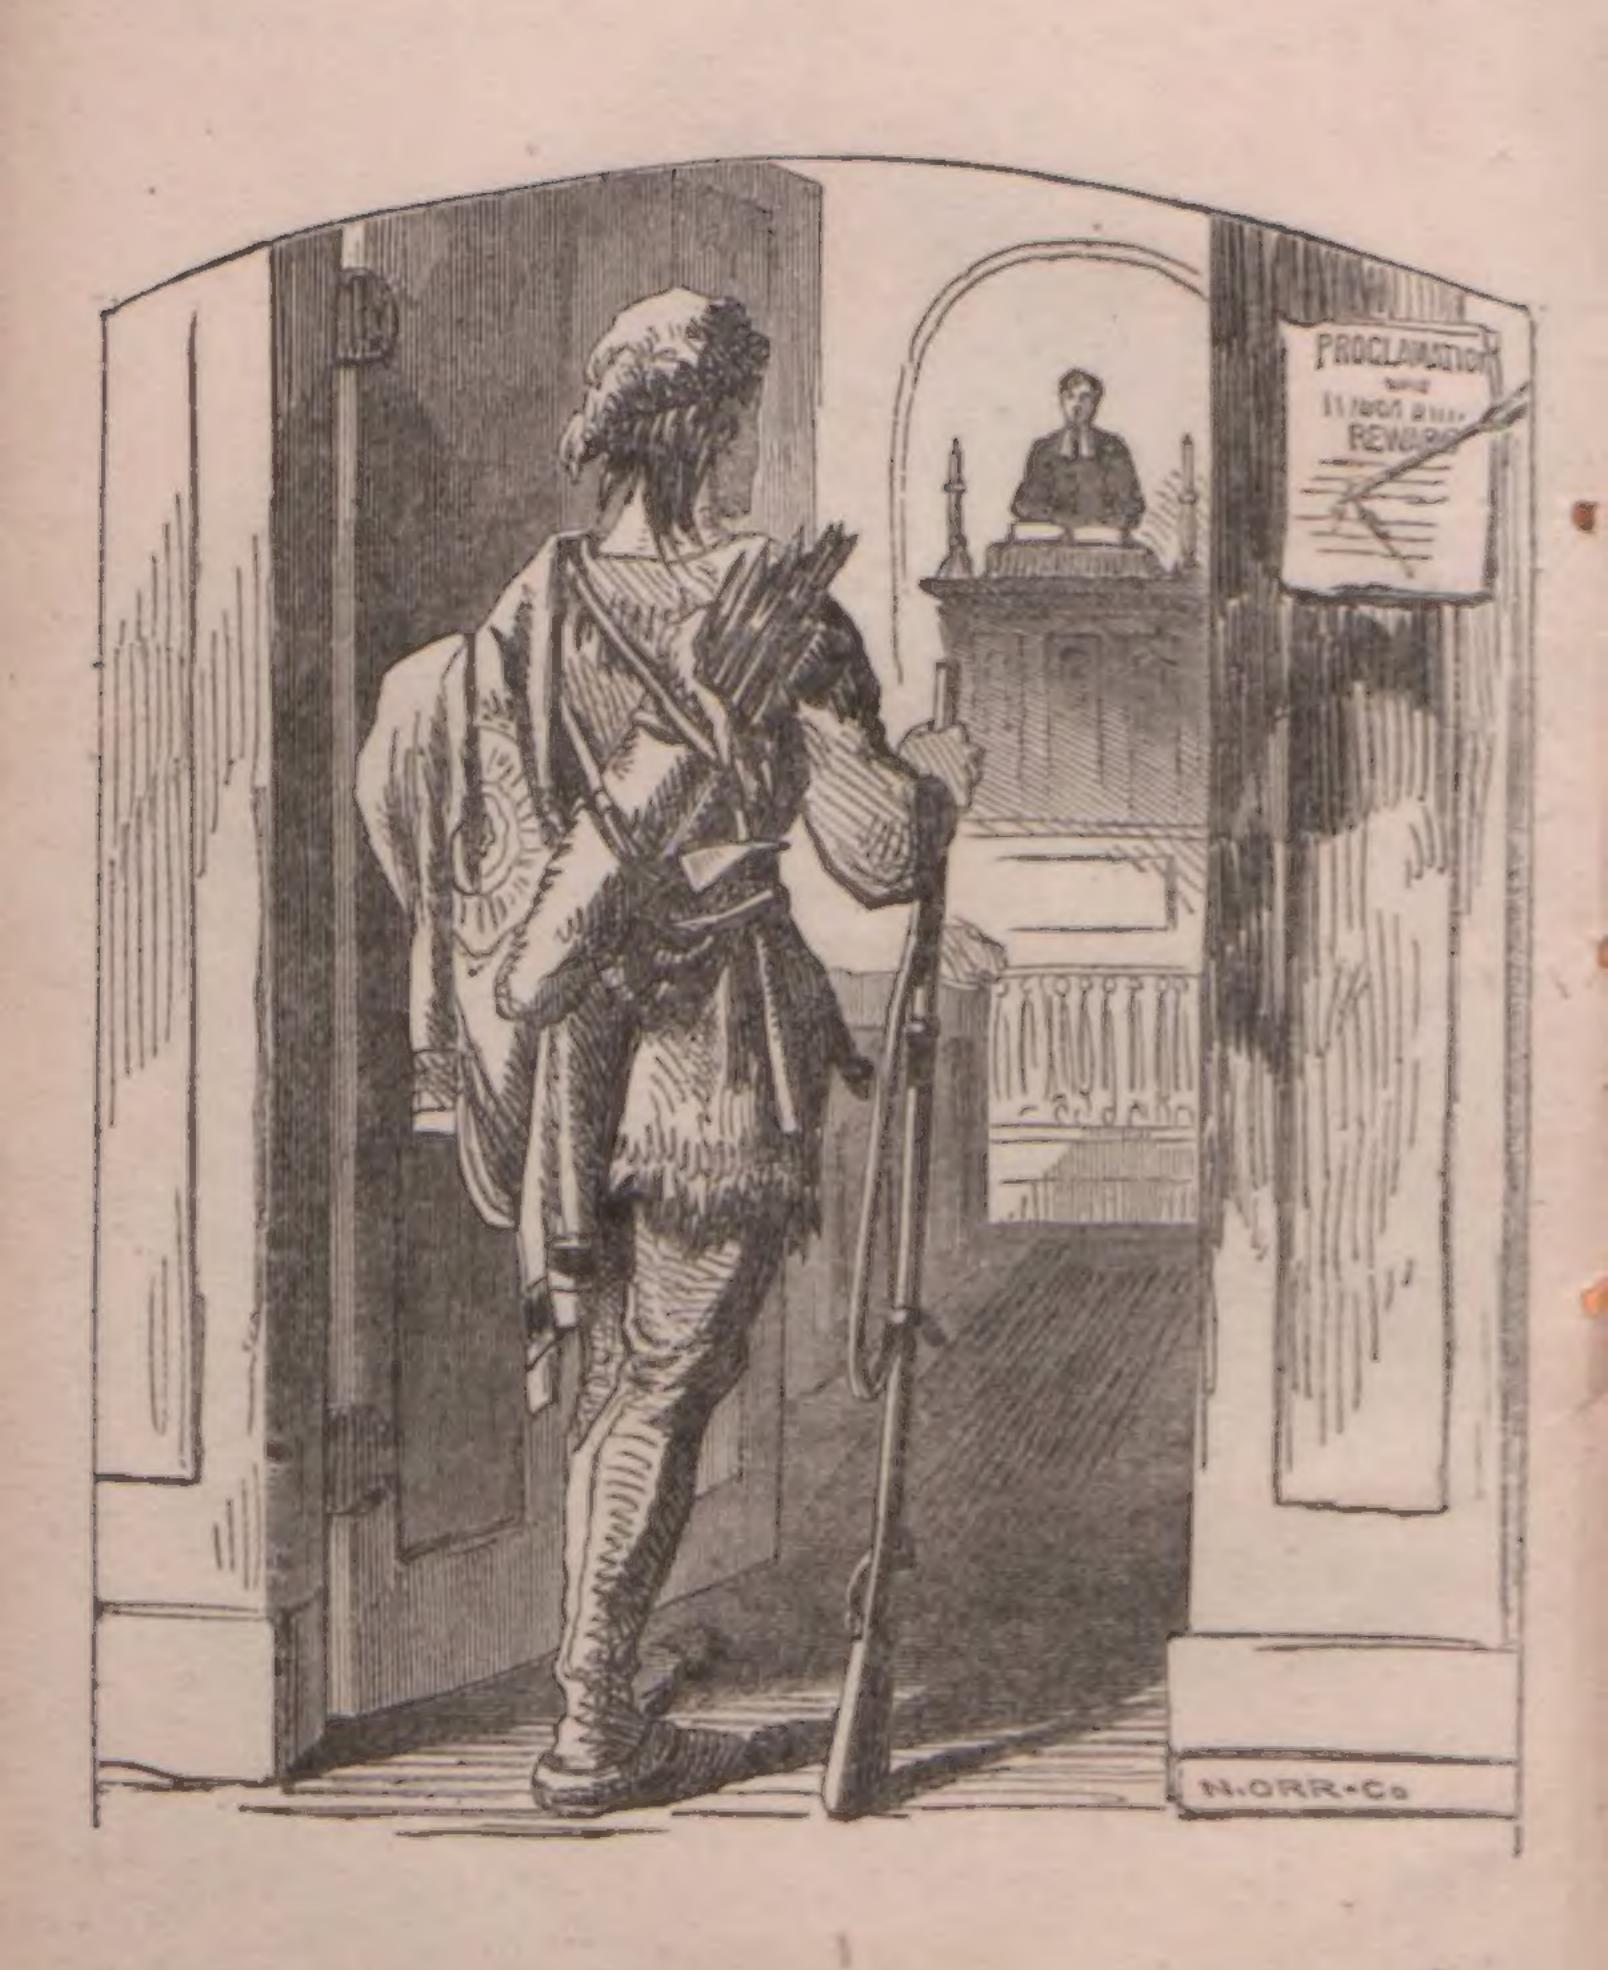

Turning abruptly to the right, so as to get away from the main trail, he approached the island from behind. He did not expect to find Marion there. He knew very well that the Swamp Fox was in another part of the swamp, but he was confident that he should find either Peter Horry or his brother. Nor was he disappointed. As he approached the camp from behind, he found himself safe from the view of the partisans by a fringe of low bushes. Lying prostrate behind these, he advanced on his belly, like a snake, until the sound of voices, evidently very near at hand, warned him to desist.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 118 William Street, N. Y.

SAGAMORE OF SACO.

And she who climbed the storm-swept steep,
She who the foaming wave would dare
So oft, love's vigil here to keep,
Stranger, albeit thou think'st I dote,
I know, I know she watches there.—HOFFMAN.

BY MRS. E. OAKES SMITH,

AUTHOR OF "THE NEWSBOY," "BERTHA AND LILY," "BALD EAGLE," ETC.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS,

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1868, by

BEADLE AND COMPANY,

In the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York

(No. 142.)

SAGAMORE OF SACO.

CHAPTER I.

STANDING ALONE.

"John is a wild renegate, and a shame to the colony," exclaimed Captain Richard Bonyton, in a burst of unfatherly indignation. It was evident that he neither understood nor loved this son John of his.

"I do not think so badly of him," rejoined Sir Richard Vines. "We must bear in mind, my friend, that in breaking away from the trammels of society, we have helped to sow this unchartered license in our children, good neighbor."

"That may be," rejoined Bonyton, bitterly, "and we are likely to reap the fruits of it. My renegate son and your mad daughter are like to make a comely span."

The Governor started and turned pale at this unceremonious speech, but he replied, in a calm voice:

"My daughter, Mr. Bonyton, shall be looked to."

Bonyton grasped his hand warmly.

"Nay, nay, my noble friend, we are both stricken of God and afflicted in this matter; let us not add a drop to our bitter cup by estrangement between ourselves. Look yonder where they come."

At this moment the two of whom they had been speaking emerged from the verge of the forest. The girl was evidently angry, for she gesticulated rapidly, and gave emphasis to her words by twanging her bowstring till it gave out a sharp, shrill sound like a subdued yell. As they approached, the two fathers stepped aside, where they could watch the pair unperceived.

At a glance they saw that both were dripping with water, and both were pale and excited.

The lips of John Bonyton were compresed to a single line of blue, his brow contracted sharply, and, as they paused on the verge of the forest, his flashing black eyes were fixed upon the face of Hope, who stood looking upward to him, her exquisite head thrown back; while ever and anon she gave her long hair a shake to relieve it of the heavy drops of water, and then twanged the bowstring as a help to her expression, they heard her say:

"You know I can swim, John Bonyton. You know I never want help anywhere, nor for any thing." (A shake of the hair, and twang of bow.)

"I know you fear nothing, Hope-"

"Fear!" interrupted the girl. "Fear! I scorn the idea. Haven't I leaped a hundred times from rock to rock across the Saco falls? Leaped the wolve's chasm?"

"I know it all, Hope, but-"

"But me no buts! Haven't I defied Samoset himself when he made me angry? (A shake and a twang.) When that ugly Terrentine would have carried me off to make me into a medicine-woman, did he not barely escape with his life? and hadn't I his scalping-knife out of his own girdle to defend myself with?"

Young Bonyton shuddered.

"You fear nothing, I know, Hope, but I could not see you drown."

"Drown!" returned the other, twanging her bow till it fairly yelled; "do you not know I would rather drown ten times, than be brought out of the water in your arms? You know I would, John Bonyton."

"I could not see you drown, Hope," he reiterated, with more of softness in his look and tone.

"Suppose I chose to drown, John Bonyton, what right had you to interfere?"

"Hope-dear Hope, I know you did."

"Well, and what if I did? Do you think I will be pulled out like a fish, and be laid upon the bank to open and shut my mouth for lack of breath, and you looking on? I tell you, John Bonyton, I hate you."

The youth smiled—a manly, deferential smile, and whispered a word in her ear. Suddenly she started, gave one wild, earnest look into his face—then stepped aside. The blood rushed like a torrent to her face, and she fled homeward with the speed of a startled fawn.

At this moment the quick ear of young Bonyton detected the sound of footsteps, and he pressed forward to encounter his father and Sir Richard Vines. The whole truth flashed upon his mind.

"You have seen all and heard all," cried the excited youth.
"Sir Richard, give me little Hope to wife and I promise to do and be all you ask of me."

The two calm, stern men glanced at each other, and each smiled, it might have been thoughtfully, it might have been in scorn; whichever it was, the effect was to irritate the already vehement youth, and he went on:

"Yes, you contemn us both; we have always been met with scorn and contempt. Because we do not join your long, canting, hypocritical prayers, you have caused us to live like outcasts in the land. My very soul loathes the doings of this people, and by the God above, if you do not give me Hope to wife, I will have her, if I back my suit with an army of Indians."

"In sooth, you would make a pretty pair," retorted the elder Bonyton, in clear, cold tones and a sarcastic curl of the lip.

"Do not taunt me now, father; I can not bear it," and he went on more calmly. "Give me Hope, Sir Richard, and I will leave this wild life; I will plant, study, fish, go to sea, and even aim to be eminent in the church; any thing that you and my father may exact, I will do, only give me this one desire of my life."

It may be this appeal from the young, handsome lips of the boy touched some delicate, long-silent link in the chain of association in the mind of Sir Richard Vines, for his look and voice softened, and he laid his hand tenderly upon the shoulder of the youth, and said:

"On my soul, John, I am sorry for this, most sorry. Go to England, my dear boy; this wild land affords no scope for a mind like yours. I will give you letters to my noble kinsmen, who will promote your interest, and you will forget all this."

"Time works wonders, my boy."

&quot;Never-never!" returned the youth.

&quot;Alas! it makes the noble forget their youth and the true forget their truth!"

"Go, my son, to a land that needs just such ardent spirits as yours; go and help your king and country."

A dark frown passed over the face of Captain Bonyton, for it was well known that the colonists, with few exceptions, sympathized with the parliament of England, and not with Charles First. But touched to finer issues, the headstrong youth felt a softness steal over him, and he answered to the sentiment rather than to the fact of paternity.

" Nay, my father, give me Hope; the world is nothing to me deprived of her."

Here the natural sarcasm of the elder Bonyton broke forth. "Go, John, go, in God's name; it were a pity that so much chivalry should be wasted here in this wilderness. Go, fight with the king against his turbulent parliament. I doubt if thy single hand may not turn the scale. That bold man Cromwell is making hot work at home. It were better for thee to go there and die in harness, than stay here and marry a mad woman."

Young Bonyton's eyes glared momentarily upon the father who gave utterance to this cutting speech, but he turned to Sir Richard and said, imploringly:

"Tell me, yea or nay, my father."

Sir Richard pressed his hand upon his brow, to crowd back the pang caused by the words of the elder Bonyton, and then he took the hand of John and said, in a voice so low and solemn that it was well-nigh inaudible:

"Young man, you know not what you ask. Hope must not be, can not be, a wife. She is God's child, John. He has seen fit to reserve some of his gifts to be her eternal inheritance. She is incomplete in mind—not mad."

Bonyton groaned audibly, and Sir Richard continued: "Go to England, my dear boy. I see that Charles is wrong, very wrong. I see Cromwell will place his plebeian foot upon the royal purple. I see the virtuous Hampden will be crushed amidst conflicting interests. I foresee great, marvelous changes, the germs of a new order of things. Go, my son, and cast in your mite into the treasury of order and patriotism. You have youth, health, and the impulses of a generous and heroic nature: go, and feel your heart respond to the promptings of duty. Go, and God be with you."

He had spoken with warmth and enthusiasm, the tears springing to his eyes, and the young man grasped his hand with energy, and replied:

"I will be all that you depict, sere that Hope will be mine, or will remain as she now is. Shall it not be so, Sir Richard? Shall I not some day, when more worthy of her, call her wife?"

"John, men, who are men, prove their manhood by residing in rain the desires. Such desires granted often come in the shape of a curse."

"That they do," responded Captain Bonyton with hitterness. "Like the hankerings of Gol's people for flesh, the Almichty grants it to them, tid they are filled with loathing and abhorrance, even of that for which they had lusted."

Sir Richard Vines, obeying a sull len warm impulse of the Leart, threw his arms around the unhappy youth and exclaimed:

"My poor boy! Forget my little Hope, or let her be to you only as a sister."

CHAPTER II.

THE FATAL OMEN.

Ir is now ary that we should go back in the details of our story, in order to give our radius the antecel ats of the characters which we have so uncorremonically brought up a the story of action, and that we may show the locality of our history.

It is the last configuration of the following the field and the spin growth of that year, by Sir Richard Vines, the friend and companies of Radian of Sir Ferdigan to Corpor, of Radian Gillent, and the uniform to Sir Walter Relation, the half-broth roof the last remains at an interest of the colony he had thus founded, and there is about not rearly of his movements, his enterprise and his history, the it was finally incorporated into the Plymouth charter

Sir Richard Vines was a stanch Tory and Epice pull mand as he was a fearless man, robust and hearty in character, he was not likely to greatly swerve from the equinciples his rent to his rank; hence, it may be intered he was not over popular with the nodes unflinching Puritar radicals of the Presbyterian order at the Plymouth colony.

The wife of Sir Richard Vines, the Lady Jeanna, was sixty to the wife of Sir Walter Rabiah. Here, in removing hem the old world, the interests of the family were by no mans dissevered from "merry old England," as they were went to tenderly call the "Fatherland."

I must describe somewhat the leadin theon by Sir Richard Vines for his habitation, that my readers may the latter understand portions of our story.

It should the head of what is called the Poll, a should water recombling in shope the Mediterr non somes and sometime the maps. Indeed, it is a counterpart of the Mediterran in diminished vasily in size. The Pool is a paraded from the outside waves or the Athentic by a long ridge or rediction in the count, gives place to a beautiful inhand besing which is entered by a narrow strait, as if it were a your right of the Once in, the waters expend, and speculations has with entered by a face of statement of the production of the passage of the production of the passage of th

Nething can be conceived more deletely plants, in the sonery surremaing the Poel. There are no making a large no making of fews; all is nesh, then white seeds in the contract, and the grand over in the large weeks mixing a polyway to the resonabler Sice, or be her here and the large ephancies of green mealows, where the degree of the making of thems ives, and the leaver constructs his half and habitation.

At the heal of this leantiful sheet of which such as a line of the solid line is a line of the solid line is a line of the solid world, or from the island of Barbara valuables of the first infinitely better in the least to kell somety within the Political line in the type downstance in the part of the point of the line in the characteristic in the part of the part of the line in the characteristic in the line i

A frank, impulsive man, he gave and inspired confidence; trave himself, he repelled the argressor, simply by the force of his presence. Just and kind in all his declines with them, the Indians came and went about his premises exciting no fear, and conscious of no distrust.

Believe the castle of Sir Richarl, there sprang up immediately about it, the less pretentions however of his followers, and ordine constructed by occasional traders, to say nothing of the bork wigwams of the Indians, which observe and there near the river, the friendly owners of which gave the adventurers many a less on in hunting the will decizes of the forest, or spearing and nothing the treasures of the water.

Mistress Johnna was an intropillus well as hands one dame, who entered warmly into all the persuits of her husband, while at the same time she had a certain self-listrust, most winning and lovely in a went in who finds has if all to a will, protective has all, whose arthority she is provided to accept with while tent to see provided which while tent to see provided which while tent to see provided with while tent to see provided with while the times, and we manly grace.

We must now does be in incident which occurred toward the class of the year 1018, which is too intimately a so intell with the character of our larelier to be passed by in sheet.

It was a risy, new twill lit near the coll of October. A full of rain, with now and then a "spit of snow," had made a misnny day in that coll region; the row constant in a week fact so it miner their rainbow beliefed to the cut, and the smaller likely, but a way upon their plantages to so it rails, and their plantage it cally by the lattle snowshirds, which plantage is a replaced them been have in the fact the invited trees, continually by one in themselves at a time when a nature is a very night of her favors.

A slip was healy expected from Eschad, and recating the new of a more revorable view taken by the court of the court of Sir Walter R lock, (who helded a local interest in the Tour of Lockers) had awaren in tendy a hope of his relating him cut to the home so all the collyprovided to have by his brother-in-law. So strongly had taken by provided to home types the mind of Mistress Vines, that she had even caused thres to be built in the "Raleigh rooms," and had hang evergreens and ruby berries along the rafters, amid silken drapery and snowy linen, till the apartment were a look not only of warmth and comfort, but of sumptuous elegance also.

She stood in the center of the room, dreamily contemplating the glowing, crackling flame upon the hearth, and fasting her thoughts with the sweet hope of a union with her sister Raleigh, when she was conscious of a shelowy cutling that provide before her, and a drop of thou fell upon her head. Coll rigors lifted her hair upon her head; her eyes distanted; and with a loud shrick she fell convulsed upon the floor.

When consciousness returned, she desired to be left alone with Sir Richard, to whom she related the cause of her sudden attack.

"I am fully persuadel," she went on to say, "that the worst has come upon our brother, and we have been declived by a base court, and lying officials."

Sir Richard tried to soothe her with bitter hips, but in vain. Calling her old nurse to her side, he strong by every means to restore her to warmth and her would be the right, day by day she siekened, and at length in the Rubbler ons bosome the mother of a daughter. This cleans are, while it restored her to a more equable and had help a local field, did not displathe impression which helps had the attack. It is needless to say that the next ship brought out the fittle news of the behealth of Sir Walter Rubble, upon that I had of October, so well remember 1 by Milters Vinc.

She named her little one Hope, with a set in ty. So was a small, weir blooking bely, with here, deal-ray eyes, and skin white, even waxen white; never all the beautiful of the rose visit the cheek. Here cy swere seek little is block in her, but, as she grew, it be an a cvilet the life hair was to be seerly white. It would seen that this term of the human frame being more volvible than all others is the one most likely to be affected with charge, and the time of the name of horror, which had struck the more rate in a changed forever the color of her child's heir, and illered its cheek to a perpetual paleness.

Years passed, and sons and daughters from the first of Sir Richard Vines; thir, even bearth I were the children, trained to all gentle up a by the father that read in ther, and finally they were sent to England to be "finished" and presented at court, for the true Englishman never neglects the duties of his birth, or the privileges of his rank.

Little Hope had reached the age of seventeen. She was exceediably diminutive in stature, but most exquisitely formed. If r check was still colorless, and her long, abundant hair still white; but this, while it gave a poculiarity, did not detruct from her beauty. Sometimes the sisters of Hope would call her "white head," a term which she recented in a manner unwonted to her character, in which was no ingrehent of vanity.

It was evident that she considered her ladir a stered belge, and tenderly associated with the face of her uncle Rakigh; hence, any jest aimed at this peculiarity not only shocked her reverence, but offended her taste. She held long and solemn talks with the old English nurse, Annt Sahie, about the period of her birth, and the cruel death of Sir Walter, and the good creature did not fail to impress her mind with her own supersations belief in the supernatural omen which we have here-tofore related.

"Your hair is a mark, my pretty durling," she would say; "it is a mark, and you are none the worse for it. Not one of your sisters can compare with my pretty, for hand-one looks, with all their airs."

It was evident that Hope was the favorite of Aunt Sallie, who some times conceived that the child was not fully appropriate I by the members of the household, who e characters child within the more ordinarily understood limits. Hope was freald hand petulant, Aunt Sallie would exclaim:

"And why shouldn't shall ave her own way! Surely she is pretty enough to have it, and I see no finds to be found with her."

In heal, Aunt Sallie had little cause for complaint, as all the facts of H pe were parently tolerated, and her peculiar, but no data had had had accepted as no detriment to her good lake. At home these per distribus were less dangerous to her than they were here acer to become to her abroad.

The la lians around her saw and turned again and again to mark those has, of that ruby red which goes with perfect health; black, perfectly arched brows, and long, dark lashes, shading eyes of wonderful brilliancy and depth of expression. The whole aspect of her beauty, while it was artistic, would have presented also the idea of something pretern tural, even to those less impressible by such things than the Indian.

We will now resume the thread of our narrative.

CHAPTER III.

SORROWFUL MISGIVINGS.

SCARCELY had Hope doth ther wet garments, and wrung the water from her hair, to fore she was summand to the presence of her haly mother. It was a place interce possible of the accomplished family in the large hall, as an implication of the accomplished family in the large hall, as an implication of the day; the knightly swert, and shapely steel corslet; trophies of the hant, and implements of the chase; belts of wampum, and make is of the name of the chase; belts of wampum, and make is of the name, stately room, such as taste, enterprise and thrist only could furnish forth in a family struggling to overcome the larger isms of a new world.

In a stiff, high-backed chair, with on him at her fort, sut the clegant matron of the household; her han her selections, cach with book, music or broilery in head, were mattered near her person, as if the companion hip were matterly pleasant.

In the embrasure of the window, boding on upon the Pool, with the long reach of ocean in the distance, satour Richard Vines himself, the perfection of manly grant and noble bearing, but now his brow was slightly contracted, and an uneasy flush was upon his check.

As little Hope entered the room, he held out his hand to her; she sprung forward and threw her arms about his ne k. The knight returned her caress, and patting her check tenderly, said:

"Go to your mother, child."

Hope had nearly crossed the room in obedience, when she so the niv turned round, saying, petulantly:

"She must not talk to me, papa; I am in a bad humor, and can not bear it."

Mistre's Vines answered, with unwonted stermess:

"Combilier, Hepe, and seat yourself upon the cushion.

You must leave off these ways."

The little lady walke i to the side of the room, where, leaning her shoulder against a pilaster, she crossed one foot over the other, and bent her head, saying:

"I will stand here, please, mamma; I hate to sit down."

"I prekr you should sit," persisted Mistress Vines.

"Indeed, I can not, mamma. I feel as if I should choke, tight ned up in one of these chairs. Indeed, I can not sit down, mamma."

The sisters could not remain from a slight titter, which was instantly checked, for the perents more both severely grave, and Miss Bloomfield, the governess, shook her little decorous herd till every conk-serew could upon it was whiching and jerk-ing in a perfect storm of reprehension.

Before, however, a word had been spoken, Hope sublenly recovered her native visualty. She eyed the group with a comical shake of the head, and burst into one of her merry leight. Coming torward, she had topon the eachion at her in ther's for, and to single ack her had till it environded her like a vail, she cried:

"I kn will you will say to the lend girl; I will be mamma, and reprimand Hope. Listen!

wild In Fig. You are too if Fe, and too will—no better than a wild In Fig. You are a very upon it advertly fit for nothing goal. Why do you not sit bolt up it, but in high-backed clairs, as your siters do? Look at them! How nice they are! Not a hair of the head out of place. Here them make ugly some is on a bollow bear!! See how a fam. I they are of you, Hepe! You are a stiff to usual, Hope, in feel you are. To be John Benyton pail I you out of the water like a fish. You are a trial and a plague, Hope!

Here the him hand of his ress Vines, which had been ten lerly hill upon her head, and then once more threw herself into her father's arms, and burst into a will torrent of sobs and tears.

The family were used to these suction transitions of feeling upon her part, but this seemed a mood so much more painful than ordinary, that all were shocked.

"Do not let my cold, still sisters look at me, p.,pa," wirispered Hope. Then, lifting up her head, she added, selemnly:

" Papa, you will soon have no little Hepe."

The knight shuddered, and pressed the poor child more tenderly to his heart.

"Tell me why, little daughter!"

"Every little while, dear father, I see poor, pale-fie I Haps standing before me, looking sad, and oh! so weary, and wringing her hands."

Mr. Vines certainly felt a cold chill run over him at this description. . She went on.

"This morning I saw Hope seated on the lodge yender, her hands to her face, and she weeping, we ping. Mistess Bonyton, too, told me that this little purple spot upon my shoulder, which you used to kiss, papa, when I was a little girl, is the devil's mark, and called me a witch."

Sir Richard arose hastily from his soat and whisper in few words in the ear of his wife. A new cause for analythed been suggested by the words of Mistress Benyton, for at that time the old world was convulsed by states of possession and witcheraft, and it was no light thing to have the aspersion cast upon an individual that he or she might be a within

At this moment the shup whiz of an arrow possible that lattice. Hope darted from the room, and so with us himself at an upper loop-hole, where she could be with us himself. She watched John Bonyton where hour after hour be travers if the slip of sand which separated the Pool trem the count, ever and anon sending uneasy plances toward the man in.

Day after day passed, and Hope went no mar alor of mer did she send any token to her impatient lover. Day after day John Bonyton wandered along the shore, as if us impatient turbulence best responded to the wild passins that consider him. The dirge of the sen, creeping amid the weals that cushioned the rocks, and then harrying from point to point in stiffed sobs—anon lifting incoherent voices to storm the ear of night—respected to some unknown depth within, and soothed while it depend his emotions.

Could the unhappy youth have looked within the bower of Hepe, he would have seen her seated upon the floor, ber interse eyes following his slightest movement, and she weeping birterly. She refused food, and nothing could tempt her from her covert.

At length Samoset, chief of the neighboring tribe of Indians, desired to see her. He brought her a beautiful osier basket, in which was hilden a wood-pigeon. Hope lifted the bird from its cluster of leaves and found the blood trickling trem its breast, and a small arrow still in the wound. She reciled with pity, and east reproachful eyes upon the chief. Samoset pointed to Bonyton pacing the beach, and sternly showed the arrow in the breast of the dove. He whispered a word or two in her car, and turned away, followed by Hope.

No somer did John Bonyton perceive the figure of Hope moving slowly toward the woods, than he followed in her factstept. Scating herself upon her favorite ledge of rocks, site awaited his coming. The youth was greatly shocked at the charger than her manner and looks, and he east himself at her fact and press it both her hands within his own.

" Poor, dear Hope!" he murmured.

She looked sully in his face—a look of silent, helpless represent more emphatic than words. At length she said, in a voice searcely above a whisper:

"It so has very strange to me, dear John, how people can get along in this world, and why they are put here to be made so mast able. And so you will go away, John Bonyton—30, and we shall never meet again."

The young man smoothed back the hair which had blown to as the face of the speaker, and the passive manner so unlike H is old self, embed band him to lay her pale check upon his shoulder, and he answered:

"I will not be gone long, Hope; the time will soon pass

"But what shall I do, with nobody to understand me? And, I did a this, John Bonston who goes away will not be the John Bonston that e mes back."

"Why not, little Hope?"

"Why not? How can you ak, when nothing is toolly what it was yesterday?"

He made the usual protestrions of never-changing divetion, which she broke short with her old in petrosity, waving her hand for him to be silm; when a twig snapp i near by, and John Bonyton sprung to his feet.

"It is Acashee," said Hope, coldly. "She is always by your path."

A pain all was silent save the wood-robin, which sungupan a branch overhead, and Hope resumed:

"Do not go, John Benyton. Do not enter the ship that will bur you away, for I shall never she you again. You may come back—but may John Boryton will be then no not re."

The youth smiled fearly, for Hope had never but restroys him such favor. The mountail tenders as of her hads and works thrilled him with rapture, and he replied:

"I shall return ten times more worthy of year, H pg."

Hope started, turned pale, and with frew her hand a om his grasp.

"I said you would change, and you boost that you will."

"Only to be better, nobler, more worthy of your love."

She looked dreamily into his face and murm tred:

"And I? I shall be the same-"

"Surely, dear Hope. Lovely and beautiful. Always growing dear to my heart."

Sile shook her head, and in the same dreiny way went on:

"When the sungos down I am now require some it will come up again; and when it does it has not the some look. The sung charl never returns; the wither I bles in I is not bloom again; no free wears twing the same Io II; the sails of yesterday is not that of today."

"But the Leart, little Hope, the heart is the same."

"No, no, no! less tof all. That ros charles is a small the eye tells of its altered beatings. No, J in B year, I shall never see you again. See how charged we two are sines we last met. Look upon the rock you be juiting or a the sea. What do you behold?"

and said, with a smile:

I see the bright sunshine there, and the sea-birds dip their wings into the sea."

She still pointed with a sad smile.

"You see nothing more! I see little Hope standing there leaning over the water; she is pale and thin, and her hair has become a shroud."

The youth burst into tears, and clasped her willly in his arms. At this moment there was a cry as of the bon, and Hope flintly answere lit. She knew Acashee had witnessed the scene, and an angry flush overspread her face. With a sudden spring she descented the ledge, and returned to the house.

CHAPTER IV.

THE NET-WEAVER.

Among the Indian mailens was a boil, han bome girl, a little of ler than Hepe, who was her constant and favored companion, and having more intelligence and that then usually falls to the primitive mailens of the forest. Acashes, or the Spiller, after dly not-weaver, or snaw-bail lere) had contrived to divest he self of the usual toils and diverties of her sex in a savage condition.

Achieve was the daughter of Samet, of the Kennebec tribe—the Ialian who went to and remained three years in England, where he shared the royal favor of Elizabeth, whose accomplished courtiers vied with each other in lavishing attributes upon a man who presented a new and generous type of the race, undefinitely by the vices of civilization.

Stakes care without doubt received many a pocic hint from the noble savare, and most certainly owed to him the story of the Tempest, and the fable of the Pucks, or as the Indians called them Puck-wull-jees—being literally wood fairies.

The courage and address of Acashee had rendered her the friend and companion of her father, and his attendant upon many a long and perilous march. Among savage tribes intelligence of a strange or interesting character is conveyed by fleet runners, who go from tribe to tribe after the manner of the Highland clans so graphically described by Walter Sott in the "speed, Malise, speed" of his spirited poem. Accordingly, Sumoset was one of the first to reach the sea-shore, and look with wonder upon the ship which had come like a rare bird, or superior agent, from the spirit-had. Hold was who, fifteen years afterward, hailed the Pilgrims at Plymouth with the words: "Welcome, Englishmen."

Samoset had been of great service to the colony upon the Saco river, and Sir Richard Vines and family had not failed to treat his daughter Aca hee with much consideration. Little Hope more especially singled her out as her fiverite friend and companion. She liked her for her beauty, her courage, her strength and activity, combined with an easy gayety rare in the children of the wood, and almost unknown among the anxious and over-taxed pilgrims to the new world.

The artful savage mailen, acute and penetrating, hell not failed to perceive the peculiar characteristics of H pc, and had not failed to turn them to account in her own way. Some played her game in a manner worthy of her name, of N towever, in the best sense, Spiler in its worst. Some him I to the melancholy and superstitious Pilgrim souther, day is of her state as a true human being, for the Indians half of in the incarnation of certain malignant beings, not be them the ascetic whites.

To the Inlines of the many trib's with whom she call her father were in constant intercourse, she callared up a Hope's gifts as a won larful and incomman, and it was she who had more than once in bacal them to make attempts to abduct her for purposes of divination.

While our poor Hope was thus constantly under the eye of her willy and malignant companion, shows a source, also, of much solicitude on the part of the parents, who degraes feel painfully that cold and ernor thoughts were rife in the minds of their neit. To prepare in their, which might eld in some tracedy even more distressing than the five of S.r. Walter Raleigh, with whom Hope was so for lofters clatage herself.

Mistress Vines was a cheerial, active, dignifical woman, or she would have been sore distressed as the conviction grow upon her that all was not quite right with little Hope. In high courtly or civilized society her peculiarities would not have been observed—the pressure of the same serving to hop its members in equal balance; but in an experience admitting of greater latitude, it became evident that she, the product of a civilized, but bred amilist a primitive, race, had inherited the graces of the one, and absorbed the wild freedom of the other.

Having once obtained the key to the formation of her mind, all its manifectations were complete and harmenious. The study of a book was irksome to her, but that which she learned from the utterance of the human tongue never escaped her memory.

There was a preternatural directness in all the elements of her mind—a will, vivid adherence to truth under every aspect, which rendered any modification of it, under any circumstances, impossible to her; hence it was followed without the power to anticipate results. It might have been guins—for nothing was impossible to her; and yet, according to ordinary calculations, little was attainable. She would say, "I know it is thus and thue," but the why it was so it was impossible for her to define.

"Did it ever occur to you, my husband," asked Mistress Vine, "that there is something in the look of poor little Hope trangely like our brother Ruleigh?"

"Or n, of an, swe theart; nor is it strange. Do not be ditte and about Hope; she is as God has given her to as, and in his good time he will clear away those shadows which cleare the brightness of the spirit he has made. Take heart, good dame."

"She is good and beautiful in spite of all," rejoined the wife, exing her daughter tenduly. "Shall we ever send her to England?"

"Thy he at yearns for the mother-land, sweeth art?"

"May, my dear, get humand, I am more than content.
I haven the England, but for thee and our little ones."

And she have it the hands chasped upon his shoulder, in a most tender, wifely way.

"If the next truly content, sweet heart,"—and in saying this he separated the words, as if the better to express the deep sentiment of the love he bore her—"I rejoice, deeply rejoice, for old England is verging upon critical times; and even here, men and women are not quite safe from evil tongues and evil designs?"

He drew her nearer to his breast as he said this, for the rewere surmises and rumors which he did not name to his lovely wife.

It was evident to both parents that Hope must be left to her own existence, and suff red to enjoy it in her own way; nor was this by any means a limited or degrad done. Her exquisite organization, her perfect health and vivid vicility, were combined with a degree of hardy activity ast hishing in one so delicately made.

As a child, the Indians had treated Hope with a definite and tenderness that implied a doubt whether a creature so fair and diminutive could master the rule encounters of the; but as she grew in years, and they saw her small to the pastive, and her tiny wrath so really to wreak local, to ir a lentration knew no bounds. They delighted to become her instructors in all will wood games and primitive explains, and to apt a pupil did they find her that she seemed to their shapple observation a producty of eleverness rather than one way as mental organization was a subject of doubt or anything.

She was expert at the bow and arrow, could swim the a duck, and come out of the water and shake the drips it a her long hair without that shrunken, sous let role her constant without that shrunken, sous let role her constant at the monto women who breast the waters. She was to her to the usages prevalent at the time. She was for hot all or not as that left her movements unimpoled, but role of the next that her hovements unimpoled, but role of the next to braid, bodkin, or thlet to curb the related arry of her lets.

None of these things were lost upon the artial Action, who, in turn, teased or flattered Hope, as might lost silver the great purpose of her life, which was to sparate her many John Bonyton, for whom sae had cone ivel a passin the more protound for the obstacles which promited to detect its gratification.

Hope was well aware of the arts of the girl; but she like her bold, fearless ways, and her untiring activity. With senses as keen as those of the young savage, she detected her hanging like a cladew over her own pathway, and know that John Bonyton in the chass of the wild door, and spending salmon far up the Palis of the Saco, was often control by her rival, and was not unwilling to loiter in the presence of the bright, handsome savage.

410

On the morning of the day when our story opens, when Hope was found querreling so vehemently with her lover for Loving saved her from a long sleep under the sea, the two piles, as was their wont, had not upon a point of land a few to loss distant from the Pool, designing to follow the beautiful winding of the Saco up to the Falls, and watch the salmon, like golden ingots, "shoot" the cataract.

Standard upon this promontery, Hope's dreamy eyes wandered over the Landscape, drinking in its beauty, as her kinstern Ruleigh might have done in one of his poetic meeds. As she, on the contrary, practiced all the soldie arts of her not to, and all the coquetries of a willwood bouty, to interest the heart of John Bonyton. Aronsel at length from her is it, Hepe saw the fleshing eyes of Bonyton residential initially, as she thought, upon her compension. With a will impulse of undefined jedonsy and rage, she throw as he her had an larnows, and cot hers if into the sea.

She was rescreet, as we have seen, by the athlytic years, or thy to the disc antiture of the impulsive child. Severe had biting reprovedes were exclusived subsequently between the two girls, in which the red mailen betrayed a realize stable pink as unexpected as it was fortal. Here was not being in her vocabulary of spheen, and she turn there seefingly, crying:

is what your name means."

Actshood attel forward, soizing her by the wrist; she bent down and boked through into her eyes; grinding her teeth, she hiss I with the rage and yenom of the scrpent, into the ears of Hope:

Plantagilr! I weave a streng web. I will state in it the little fly. Go to, you had a friend; now you have a firm

And desking the hand from her grasp, she plunged into the forest.

Hope laughed a bitter, contemptuous laugh, and turned slowly homeward, followed by the repentant Bonyton, to have the indignant words of the girl and the protestations of the other overheard by the two fathers.

CHAPTER V.

THE "ELECT."

The voyage which it was proposed for John Bonyton to take to England was deferred from time to time, and the young people resumed their careless, desultory life, now in the forest and now upon the sea—Acre hee even more devoted than before in her attentions upon Hope. It might be noticed, however, that the people of the colony were more watchful, and even more critical, in their observance of the latter than usual.

Often as she passed in her short velvet tunic with her white hair floating in the wind, glances were exchanged, intermingled with now and then an ominous and malignant frown.

While the Indians watched her slightest movement with interest akin to awe, the less sympathetic colonists boked up in her with distrust amounting to aversion, and many had conceived the idea that she belonged to that dangerous class "accursed of God," and to be destroyed by men, as in these often times, when the King of Israel consulted one akin to Hepe in the person of the Witch of Endor. But, as yet, these were surmises only whispered in secret, and conceiled from the knowledge of the Governor and his friends.

The Indians of the Saco tribe, while they were more powerful then all others of the castern tribes, were less aggressive, also. Conscious of their power, they cared little to makes those whom they could easily crush, and hence they devoted themselves warmly to the white colonists, perceiving in them at once much to excite their admiration and stimulate their own endeavor.

Hope was from the first installed a favorite, and they watched her slightest look or word with interest, and then, as years developed more and more her individual characteristics, she was invested by them with a profound awe. They had penetrated some of these marked features, even before they were divined by her own family, and they would come long miles to bring her some dainty gift, exquisite tiny baskets, broidered moccasins, or shells from the sea-shore, and seating themselves upon the mat under the broad piazza, watch her every movement, and listen to the silvery tongue of the child with hair like the snow-flake.

Had Hope been ambitious or deceitful, she might have turned her mysterious power over the savage mind to some account; but, simple-hearted and truthful, she enjoyed her little triumples without any thought of what might lie beyond. The chief of the Saco tribe, seeing her contempt for all house. It avecations, looked upon her with wenter and delight as the incarrection of some of their own delices, who would eventually bring great glory to the tribe.

Mistress Vines, while no one could bring the slightest charge against her, was by no means popular with the "e's the less" of the colony. Mindful of her had not if they love guard her resided with affectionate directly, and truly love guard her cring her hashand, she was little ined. I to count name any course which should create any interest outside of the sacred relation of the family.

The whiteal as she was tender, julicious as she was affections; she was doubly happy in a hasband worthy of all real and daty, to whom she could refer all abstrace and well, to prestions of opinion, and whose decisions were to her wifely mind the wisest and best.

Mittees Bonyton, the mother of John, was in the habit of collection the principal women of the colony at her house on the Siturdity of every week, for the purposes of prayer and religious discussion.

Matrix Vine had received many invitations to join this supplieding concluse, but from the above reasons, to other with a natural vivacity of character, which rendered gloom and just as in distastely to her, she had neglected to also have if with their ascette women in what she regarded as an evidence of cant, and, it may be, of hypocrisy also, to her clear, cheerful intellect.

Captain Bonyton, however, secretly gave Sir Richard a hint, in a neighborly way, that the women felt themselves aggrieved at this omission, and the more, hinted at dark, mysterious opinions in regard to little Hope, which it might be well to counteract by a more familiar intercourse of Mistress Vines with her neighbors.

Sir Richard having suzgested this to his fair dame, she might have been seen the next afternoon, fresh as a rese, and bright as the morning, picking her way to the mansion of Mistress Bonyton.

She carried herself bravely in her high heels, and the stiffest of stiff rulls barricading her fair neal, and her rich brown hair drawn back from her brandsome forchead, and frizzed in a way wondrous to behold. A little less of style, a little less of theness, my lady, would have better saited the abstere dames who await thy coming!

They were seated in the "forc-r one" of the horse, the short ters of which were partially closed, giving a dlin, ghorty as pect to the interior, in which were seated about twenty we men, plainly dressed, each with her hair parted at the top of the head and drawn to the back as smooth and tight as hair could well be drawn. The closely matrons were so at latence side, and the younger prosped to their near the door. If ir, pale young faces were not wanting; prematurely grave, but pure and tender.

"It is nearly upon the stroke of three, and yet she does not come. Reach me the Elble; the Lord's work must not wait because of his tardy servants."

This from Mistress Bonyton, who drewdown her fact callnously, and closed with a groan.

"What think you of that child, Hope? I would have thy opinion, dame, for I have great misgivings."

Mistress Bonyton put her timeer in the Bible, where she had found the chapter she designed to real, and she now closed the book over it, and standing the large volume on only, bent forward, resting her chin upon it, she haded cut of the corner of her eye at Mitress Higgins, who had asked the question.

"I think thy thought, dame."

The younger wethen started; but Mistress Higgins continued:

"I saw her even now, as I came in, worrying a snake, and traly it was a rare sight to see the docility of the beast."

"Whist! my laly is at the door!" exclaimed one of the younger women.

Mistress Vin a entered, with her pretty, courtly manner, curtesying right and left, after the fashion of the times, and then instinctively seated herself beside the young matrons, who blashed and smiled at her pleasant greeting, while the ellers gravely bent their her is and pursed up their mouths in a pions way. A silence of some minutes intervened, for the Ledy Joanna was no unimportant personage to be present, and was well known for a smart dame, with renely wit, and sharp reported, and though in her absence it might be politic to treat her with in lifference or contempt, she being present altered the case; and even Mistress Bonyton, habituated to command, and accustomed to lead off her satellites in a free and cay manner, found herself inconveniently awed in her presence.

At in ith Mistress Bonyton, in a solemn voice, and with intermitting groans, grasping the Bible and closing her eyes, said:

"We have appropriated this afternoon for the especial purpose of praying for the conversion of that plea ant (grean) but ungolly "groun) man, Sir Richard Vines."

Mistres Vines started; her will by face reldened with surprise, not unminated with anger, and she replied promptly, with her tright eyes surveying the group:

"I thank ye, soold mes, in that ye will pray for my noble lorl; but, in what way has he earned the right to be called ungodly?"

"Our occasion is for the holding forth of prayer, not to dis was carnel quasions," responded Mistre's Bonyten.

"But in let I, good dame, let me know his offenses, that I may the batter jain in your prayers."

"It is not meet that we talk," interposed Dame Higgins; "then art holding a chosen vessel, gifted in prayer, from the alter."

And at once the group arose, and each grasping the back of a chair, which they tilted upon two legs, Mistress B nyten opened with a violent denunciation of the "sins of prile and haughtiness; of the hankering after the lecks and garlies of Egypt, in the shape of Episcopacy; and the high heal which portended a fall; and the crimpings and mincings, and times and shows of aristocracy, a shame to the church here planted in the wilderness."

Mistress Vines quietly moved upon tip-toe to the door and went out, much flushed in the face, and most certainly carrying her pretty head quite as high as the prayer had in licated. She did not even wait for the "amen," but put the door lot tween her and them, leaving Mistress Bonyton to her invective, which they called prayer.

As she tripped along, she met Sir Richard, who smiled when he saw her flashing eye, but he put her arm within his, smiled, and patted the hand that lay upon his arm, for he divined the cause.

"Ay, sweetheart, they do not look upon thy husband with thine eyes," and stooping his head to hers he whispered, with a boyish laugh, "heaven forefend that they should."

Whereat she laughed, and they passed onward to their happy home.

CHAPTER VI.

APOLLO AND DIANA.

From this time it became evident that a strong public opinion was gradually setting itself a rainst the family. Mistress Vines, conceiving herself in point of birth and family superior to any other woman in the colony, might be purdoned some little haughtiness which so well become her handsome here, and being of a higher culture than her neighbors, it might not be surprising if some consciousness of it were apparent in her manners; but these petty traits weigh heavily on the minds of a people more ambitious than cultivated, and inclined to envy and jealousy, as the proud and ignorant are sure to be.

The wife and daughters of Captain Bonyton more especially conceived thems lves aggrived by the deportment of Mistress Vines, and though the captain exerted his utmost influence to allay the growing irritation, he was far from being successful, women being very apt to think that when they have made a matter the subject of prayer, they must necessarily be in the right. To those causes was added another near home: John Bonyton, the son and brother, had, from the first, shown himself not only interested in Hope Vines, but completely absorbed in her. Seeing this, outraged as they conceived themselves to have been by the mother, the underguised devetion of John to Hope," the implish creetur," as they not unfrequently called her, was a dding gall to bitterness.

John Bonyton was a bold, headstrong boy, such as the price and circumstances of a new and unsettled country would be likely to develop, but such as the rigid disciplinations of the day would regard with little favor. It is well known that these non-east men and women must either break down the high spirits engendered by their own flesh and thool, and mental, make, or be confronted by a spirit like their own, which nothing can quall but the maker of the spirit of man.

The and dark, the youth John Bonyton was handsome withal, reckless and roving; dish lined to teil, and expert in wealtend sports, like Hope, he found better companions sip with the natives of the forest, and dwellers in the wigge, and to an in the more coast decorums of civilized society. Generally daring, he was also tender to the gentler sex, even to a degree unwouted among the stern men who had to not a refuge from personation amid the wilds of the New World.

The unthristy son, and the white-haired, dark-cycl daughter of Sir Richard Vines were considered one and inseparatio. In the williest woods, a lown the deepest ravines, up the highest hills, and off by the seasile, might be traced everywhere the poolsteps of the strong, peril-loving children, and the silvery laugh of little Hope rung like the chimes of the wren-bird upon the air.

Nothing could be more willly pictures pre than the two-he with his dark, flashing eyes and earling hear, athletic, and yet light and flexible as a young mountain supling, armed with pouch and gun, and followed by a brace of hour is, his invariable companions, and the pretty Hope in her short, crim on-velvet frock, reveding feet arched, electional south, even for her diminutive fleare, and molding the pointed shore by its firm pressure. A light velvet cap surmounted her head, and bracelets of gems and strings of wampum in remingled upon her arms and girdle. Over these hong her abundant hair, like a silvery vail—rippling, wavy, and elepting into curls about her temples. She generally carried a low and arrow in her hands, and was nothing both to bring down a light or agreet the flight of a radic in her patieway.

She was addylled, like her companion; I it while he was gentle always in her pre-nee, she was captici us and always imperious, not scrupling to assert her claims with a high tess of her pretty head, and a stamp of the little fat. Poll of health, and naturally confaceous, danger rather allared than repelled her; living mostly in the open air, she was as char of eye and firm of foot as a young star.

Hope neither felt nor affected timility in reaming the stormy seasonst or climbing the willest recky cries. Her foot as really and instinctively lesp 4, until 6, the blackest chasms, the rudest heallands, and the recki at cliffs, as all that of her companion, and she walked coward, after achieving these feats, without comment or explicit in

In saiding over the Pool, or along the said in Baytan gave her the relier to steer as a matter of cours, and if the wind were him, so they had recourse to the car, Hejman sumed one in the same manner.

Sir Richard's family were standing up on the plazza, we telling the movements of Hepe, who so of upon a slip of rock extending souward, with our in hand, and her heir their in a knot under her chin. She had evidently determined upon a row to one of the islands in the distance, to which her companion objected, pointing to the masses of dark chard reling up from the sea, and the already dark purple has of the waves in the larid light of the gathering sterm.

Mrs. Vines hanghed as Hepergericulated rapidly, and seizsyrung therein. Her companion could do no less than follow, at I they were soon sailing down the harbor, the little boat careening heavily.

"Is she had a perfect little Puck, as our Indians call the wood-fairies?" said Mistress Vines.

True, most true, sweetheart; but a fearful cloud, I for, is outle ting over our house. Say not a word, my brave wite, but we must go home. I hear that which chills me to the ret. Poor, dur, innecent little Hope! Ah! dame, when we hear of tortures inflicted up a others, we hardly realize their import till those we love are the atened therewith."

"Try would not dure to touch a hair of her precious head," responded Mistress Vines.

"In itself, they would, sweetheart; but we will leave them I if retheir plans are matured; and first, we must send has be districted by abroad. He stays only to his and our min. Use that silvery tengue of thine, dame, to the chis departure."

"Ah! Is e it all—we must abundon this dear Parallee of ours, where we have been so happy, and where our children were bern, and go to a new land once more, and to a new people. Oh! my hisband, my heart misgives me."

And she fall dher two hands upon his shoulder, and howed her head their on, with a barst of tears.

CHAPTER VII.

A FAMILY CONCLAVE.

Mistries Bonyron sit with her daughters, busy with knittic twell and sowing, when Dane His his entered, with work in it in he pass on hour in noish only that. Hardly were they sided, when in the distinct were soon John Benyton that Hardler castler their hooks hard the sia, fishing; for four the point of rocks on which they stood, many a sine bass had been brought ashore.

Dans Hi and one of the Bayta sharply; she was twine snapped with a keen, biding sound, which seemed not unpleasant to the notable dame. Every time she knott date mesh, she lifted her eyes and scrutinized the face of the histess, as she drew the twine home.

"I think our brother John is certainly bewitch it," said Perseverance Bonyton, to her sister, at the same time litting off the thread of the seam she had just completed.

Nancy, who had been addressed, was darning a pair of stockings, with a small yellow goard in ite to hold the parts in sleep. She threaded the darning-needle, arrang I the goard, and commenced working before she spoke, and then her laconic answer was no more than:

"I shouldn't wonder !"

"My conscience, Nance, is that all you've got to say, after waiting so long to get it out?"

Nancy compressed her lips like one determined not to be provoked into speech, holding the stocking close to her breast, and passing the needle over and under the threads, weaving in a parient, piece of cloth. At last the reat was close, and she held it up in triample, saying:

a work is to be done, Perseyerance, I can wait."

"And while we wait, John is every day more and in re-deluded."

"Did you ever notice that little spot, like a drop of their, on the shoulder of Hope Vines?"

"It is plain enough to be sen," return I Pers verace, running up a long medical of stitutes up at a now some

"Dil you ever see any natural-born, true homen creature, with such flery dark eyes, and black brow, and a healt of white heir to make you think of the pide here of the Rivellations?" continued Nancy, remorselessly patching in and one over and under, her little web, and at each time to he gather yellow gourd.

"I never did, and I never want to see shah the "her."

Did you ever see a free that is as while as if every stain led been bleached out in the freetral snow— at all high run or shine, but or cold, yet never brown have have beaut, while the two lips are like two red cherries?"

"You hnow, now, Name, she is as hands inc ds Lay pleter; there's no getting over that, so don't spin out what you are going to say, but out with it."

"Well, then, if I must say it, here 'tis. I believe Hope Vines is a born devil—an incarnate imp, and that the soul of John is in jeopardy."

Mistress Bonyton had not removed her eyes from the pair fishing upon the rocks, and Dame Higgins had continued to knot much after much, twanging the knots, each one with a sharp like, like a hiss, while the two girls pars and the above conversation in a low but querulous tone of voice.

"If that was a boy of mine, exposed to the saures of—of —a girl like that, Mistress Bonyton, I should go and call him in—a wise woman looketh well to the ways of her household."

For the first time Mistress Bonyton withdrew her eyes, and modes ically pursued her knitting, and she answered, with a somewhat sorrowful smile:

"It you had my son John to deal with, you would most likely have a good time calling."

"He is of no earthly use in the world, while that girl is alout. I shall be glad when the vessel is ready to go." This from Perseverance.

"If I had my way, he shouldn't go at all, to fight agin' the Lathrment," was Nancy's response.

"Never you mind, gals; there is more than one way to kill a cat."

And, as Mistress Bonyton said this, the click of her knitthromall s was like so many sharp stabs.

"Oh, yes, mother, but they are long a lying," sail Persevermen, tying a double knot in her thread, and digging her needle into her work.

I) one Higgins had been steadily tying the mesh after mesh of her net, drawing out the thread with a twang, and she now hillier hands in her hap, and booking Mistress Bonyton straight in the eye, said slowly:

There will be no good come to this land, this church plant I in the will brows, till the heathen are rooted out; root and brom homest be destroyed, and all that deal with 'wizards that I ap '—ch—and enchanters—ch—and witches—ah—and dealers in familiar spirits—ch—khall be cut off and wholly destroyed—ch—ye shall show them no mercy—ch."

This was said with a rising inflection of voice, and an indescribeble sing-song drawl, which is ludicrous or ingressive according as the sympathies of the heart are for an artist the speaker.

Perseverance, throwing her work into the bashet, and her such herself fiercely with her two arms.

"That is consing to the point. Elither there are with ser there are not. If there are no witches, then the Libert s."

Perseverance contract I her brows, compress I har lips, and boke I around like one who has start I a eliminate. Mistress Bonyton moved her halving-nec lies with echanics and precision, and answered, slowly:

"My mind has been functive exercised on this point. I have seen much as I held my peace, till my soul criefle out within me, and I will not a per be silent. I shall do my permet to bring this question before the council. If my has band smalls, well and good; if he forburs, the paint has one had a shall clear my skirts by calling up in the Lord's people to purge the land."

"I was saying very nearly the same we. Is to my . a, Ephraim, lest might," near a library Hill dim. "In inclinity a devoat year, and a graig. I write poors to make the less chosen," and "to dame drew the mash limit with a library is white.

Mitr Begton straichtenel her Matellet in rand mit ir die t. I be a touch d, and she redich a hein taris:

"It would be a smort youth for each to be him.

John La word his own; but I have not a torred to a contract of the contract of win a substance of the property of the propert

At this Personance over Manry a sly touch with the fit and the latter ordered a little, just a small, it is as blea, suitable to a staid spin-ter, for E, braim was not likely to create any very fiery emotion.

"With estraying from the que tion in hand, or 'p," said the history. "I learn, by the last arrivals from home, that in que is are not only at their what on the face of these civil comme tions, but that in sandry places have broken out overs cases of witchcraft and place sion, whereby the prace of the fity of many devout persons has been greatly jumpardized?"

"Yea, yea, I have read thereof; it were a goodly thing if this young church in the wilderness, as yet little disturbed by harries, should give the offer one a lesson. What think you, mistress?"

Mistres Bonyten did not reply directly to the question, but by her work in her hip, replied, slowly:

"At one time it was thought that your son Ephraim was falling into the source of this—this—"

"Witch devir." Perseverance came thus to her mother's aid.

"Yea, it is me t true. Ephre's eat day after day, like ach-like a sparrow upon the house top-ch-hancating."

the latter, nothing daunted, replied:

"Hag a wely youth has been led a tray, but when he return, and saith 'I have sinned,' it shell not be accounted to him."

"Then art of a goodly speech, Nancy, and I thank thee," returned Dame Higgins.

"In re, o'll y at 2 c that?" or I I Perseverance, with a suldark of the may life, If you Vr. s jump of off that o'lls, the whole hight, or I then walke I home as if nothing had happool. No seat can do such a thirty with at help of some let I. I on 'i sweet I now a shape had angle r up—t' r — I have up I not, at it can toward the world in the chapter.

a black cat."

educe a memoritar of a distribution in Fertil, where is to interpret the product of the second control of the John Longton now entered with a fine back, which he had upon the shelf. He bowed slightly to Dame Higgins, but, observing her work, expressed interest in its progress. It was wonderful how whist the four women became upon his entrance, which observing, he passed out again, saying, with a grave smile, which well become his handsome face:

"I am sare I nipped some woman's story in the bull by coming in, so I will even go, that ye may flaish it," and he went out again, whereat Dame Higgins exclaimed:

"Ye surely put all your beauty into that boy, mistress, and saved little for your girls."

Both the girls pouted somswhat at this, but Perseverance hummed:

"What care I how black I be! Forty pounds will marry me!"

And Dame Higgins soon after took her leave, followed to the door by Mistress Bonyton, who implored her to give no currency to their recent conversation.

"The time is not yet ripe," she continued. "The Governor is powerful, and Mistress Vines well esteemed. We must proceed with caution. John is not to be tritled with, as ye may judge, and his father is strong and willful. We must proceed only upon sure grounds."

Dame Higgins promised discretion, but she had several visits to pay that day.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE SPIDER'S WEBS.

It was just milnight, and John Bonyton still paced the sands at the head of the Pool, striving in vain to wrest his thoughts from the one object of his devoicen. At length, as the moon was lost in the west, he turned wearily homeword, with that vague unrest with which persons turn to a disagreeal elecation. Emerging from a grove of pines, he observed a figure leaning against the bole of one of these, with head drosping upon its breast.

"What do you here, Acashee?" he asked, collly, as he stood before her.

"Think of John Bonyton."

"I like it not, Acoshen. I like it not. Thou art beautiful —the rart bright, and ful or power. Core it a cube of thy tille best workly of the cand pursue mereo more."

"I am beautiful, John Bonyton. Thesh, and strong, and strong, and strong and strong the mountainment. I am ut to mother heroes, John Bonyton, and you turn from me to love a girl small as the rabbit compared with the panther."

She approached him; she laid her slender wrist upon his arm, and looked into his face with her dark eyes, that had a supent facination in them, while her parted conal lips showed the small white to th, and give an indescribable soluctiveness to her person.

John Bonyton shook off her hand sternly.

"Go, Acashee. It is not becoming the daughter of a great chief to seek the love of the white man."

And he turned away.

Acceler's tree flushed with rage, but she did not follow him. In a low, soft voice she called:

"Come back, John Bonyton, I have something of which to speak."

He returned, and a sin she hid her slend r wrist upon his arm, and he could beel the pease leap in its little round.

"B think thee, John Bonyton, thy people contemn thee; Sir Richard Villes was not give thee his mediler, or if he did, the Grant Spirit wall at teather Hope Villes to well!"

" What mean you?"

"No is set apart; she is a diviner of ecrets, a propiet of the factor. Same me and for the emilef the people."

Bergin Lagard with the and report is wife. Go, and let us meet no more."

The pirity and her testic with rape as she saw him ready to the and ready and the ready to the and ready such as a ready section and the ready such as a ready section of the ready by the heal.

Come, and Acade while the pour wignant; she who is proud as the carle to the approaches of class, shall essable words in the cas of him vaccines are all the second the relation of the relation, as in a later the transfer the rock."

to a terror treath a train a than J in Page .

love Hope Vines."

"Litter to what I tell you," she caid, it ally, "If po Vines shall be your with while these, and continue a shall be barned for a while the way what it is to bring the blash of shall shall and a large and the part of a value of the point o

With a will look of rage and make in, and interest.

Her language was not lot upon Bongton, who recit that my words and inclients which could be hard to the lot over Hope Vine, and the thorax shall be burned for a witch," had a family significance.

Meanwhile, Acashee pur nel her way han ward, hall he doubt whether she should forward the plane of the colony, who, she was well assure, do had her constructed Hope as a witch, or wheth rishe she had had her constructed in their scheme to able to her, in their scheme to able to her, in the left of the prove a great medicine woman, or principle.

With these views, many a control inclient level is the most accordise made by the control in a process, and a state same time no in lightly, no sile to the angles of the Irac in the sweetness of her soul. White the according to Irac in faith were devicing meens to the process of the result of a children of a site, this nightly are not to the lightly and a faith the area of the area of the highest pitch of reverence and devotion.

Up a remains how and a series of the production of the production of the person of the ne exchald therefrom; honor, she beauch against a tree behind for faller, and Remod.

part the first place of the relative belies all also pute earth on the verse beared with constant the relative put also pute the relative put also put the constant the relative put also site.

Thus of his people.

returned another.

"Ye, may be the real they forced the ruin of the tribes.

I have a proper to the faller, faller, like the mit as the sun comes up."

"Why had only at their species, my father? Maybe the pull-the large translation as one who can show us how to avert the calamities of our people."

of her father, and exclaimed:

"Thou hast well said, my father."

in the state of th

may be caught in her own trap."

prophet-voice of our people?" Do Int Lak the the sign that the upon the girl; he resets to his

the to the he and the paddle."

"Hardly do her to the tenter out of the said a chief. "Her hair is the pearly hue of the spirit-land, fair as the snowy mist when the evening star nestles beside the young mean. Her eyes seek the stars, and like the excless, penetrate the midday sun—she is a waif from the spirit-hand. Her own people would subject her to toil, or to their foolish arts—they do not understand her. We see in her the gift of the Great Spirit—let us take her to worship."

This speech was received with approval, and many were the devices suggested to accomplish this object. The chief turned to Samoset.

"Thy daughter is wise; she understands Wa-ain; let her be called."

At a signal, Acashee approached with her hands follow, and with humble, downcest eyes, for the threat of her father had terrificd her. She stood behind him in silence.

"Will she learn to forget them?"

Acashee shook her head.

"Speak, my daughter," said her father.

"Wa-ain has no heart; she will forget all but one."

The chiefs exchange I significant glances.

"When that one is hillen from her eyes she will for to she he as in him the lost voices of the last of page and spring. When he is gone, the voices now lost will come to her ear."

Acashee glanced furtively at her father, and then sull:

"Who will look to the comfort of Woodn?—who will spread the skins for her couch, and provide the fine food in her lips? She can not live like an Indian citl."

"John Bonyton goes over the great water; he goes to bid in behalf of the great English ather—we shall see him to more."

In spite of her Indian nerves, Acashre trended band to pale at this announcement.

"How shall we obtain the person of Wa-ain? Shall we wait till John Bonyton is gone?" she at length asked.

"Unfall thy purpose, daughter," said Sameset.

Acashee saw that her father read her mind clearly—knew the hatrol she have to Hope Vines—knew of a something, which was not hate, that made her heart throb at the name of John Boryt n—knew that he saw how the abilitation of the girl would work out her own revenge. She answered, at length, in a clear, low voice:

"Wasain loves the games and festivals of the tribes; what binders that she should join in a dance before the departure of John Bonyton?"

"Why lefter his departure?" This from her father.

"B catter, when he is gone, Wa-ain will no more be seen alteral; like the wood-pitton, she will sock the deepest shales, and thence go to the spirit-land."

The council was prolonged still further, but at length the Lint of Acishee was accepted, and it was resolved to induce II perto join the Indians in one of their annual festivals, in the process of which it would be easy to so far remove her from of ervation, that a few trulty agents could carry her far beyond the reach of her own people.

Acades retired, glad to hide her exultation at this plan to separate the lovers, from the penetrating eye of her father.

CHAPTER IX.

THE FATAL DANCE.

To have separate i John Bonyton from Hope Vines would by no means have satisfied the malignant passions at work in the Loom of Acashee, who now aim that the destruction of her rival, whom she would subject to a bodily tother community in the with the jodous parts which grawed at nor own vitals.

At the earliet down sirem be to very to the office; and, and, and the stations revolutions coupled with state surgestions of the ponding day for the colony, through the instrumentality of evil spirits, who were to use Hope Vin s as a me Wha, she so wrought upon their seper title is to as as to in the think to send to Boston and processe Comments to the case.

It was agreed that all should be high a principle of the commissioners should arrive, when High his little in the up for examination, and subjected to extend on a sill and entire to test the certainty of his compactly with call and dangerous spirits of the lower world.

Thus, while Hope, careless of the listers, and endry; had in the present, lived as the lilles do in their table liven. - s, without care in the marrow, two same of hady paid were unconsciously hanging over her.

John Bonyton, also, depin of the party mail of the facily, and superior to the superstitions believed to the classical interpoles with contampt, a facility of the classical be would bring the whole man of some state of the St. Croix to the Sheo to pand han bejug to a time.

was at hard vines, while a charge charge, say that it was at hard, and sendly many plant it with a mary white he had plant it with a mary unique.

The days of which has which be 1 in 1 ) at 1. nerry mander, but of harder the tree to the Callet 'I Walle Ver, in a care and a care that of property of the second ermanity of their records. initediam the transmission of the contract of Calling the first the state of

The family of Sir Richard Vanes, as re cherrical and more well and the parliament.

popular time in property the state of the section o

The state of the state of the palls we to can y and a second state of the second state prince the transfer of the strain distribution of the prince of the strain of the stra promise.

A problem with an epath old and In-him a serrowful farewell.

The property of the property o

At least the little tend to the second tenders to the by music products themselves, but not notice that of the castingt. The corn divided night as the police of heating the casting the casting

She will not active a sat, whate dress and place is for a reaching lattle below the lance. It was anothers for a lighthered be ely at the waist by a girle of war, and the elve of the robe was ornemental with a filter of year of the his, which tinkled at the slightest may a require the roll and the subtract of the same shalls. That point constitute the rolls. Mass s of latter wars a limit rails around the snall, finding lay in a latter than the ed by a tuft of feathers from the whole of the literal as a region.

The fair vision raised her arms in our ord with the rasic, and lifted her repleadent eyes upwaring the movel from side to side, now in slow, measurer current to it is with repident steps are as the corner, containing an including the matter of the religious dance.

A bit is a clear that the clear that the least of a least of the clear that the c

Point digitly upon our too, with cys is natically a ward, he drew an arrow to the high and beausiful to a conclusion, watched the flight of the Latin blue land.

With equals 1 and , and equal 1 for the local equal to the state of the graph were Hequit Vines and Accesses, and the  $y \to y A_1 + y A_2 + y A_3 + y A_4 + y A_5 + y$

In sire of the netive sear, Sir Milliardan III farity to can combot state or into the farity and it is a sea or in a farity and it is a sea or in a farity and it is a sea or in a farity and in a sea or in a farity and it is a sea or in a farity and it is a sea or in a farity when zert in a the analysis are an are sea of the day.

This gloom was rather hightened than diminished by the dime, will have have described when races of the lattest too grown and we make in normal strances, we reasonably. The aware no other than Richard Mather and John Partridge, non eminent for their learning and picty, and who were known to have expressed strong opinions in regard to the doctrine of witchers, which had of late employed the royal pen of James, King-of England.

These men disapproved altogether of the festivities before them, and the dance was no less than an "abomination of all administrations." With hands follow into the Lose current their leng, black costs, and plain, while bund under the thin, gray heard of each, they sat perfectly motionless and without the slightest change of feature, and watched the dance. They never moved their eyes from the figure of Hope, and gradually as they are less than a slight first overspire date in pule features, and their has been called and family conspired.

Main's plant to his let, and, in a load, authorizative voice, cried out:

bring her hither."

"What mean you?" cried Sir Richard. "How dare y u

And Dr. Mather turned away.

Manage Helpinel, with a paylor of the residual the form to the left extendent of the math. A since they care every side at this caple and triangle and the analysis are the captage and triangle and the analysis are the form.

In it and at the land shall upon her parson, Heperson is it it and I in with her how and arrows, and for a measure relief the first land, and spring toward the house. So glaze II of ally around, and saw only fierce, in dignant trees south a upon her, and heavy stones raised to arrest that the Action and contactories, seeing her way loomer added and the land of the Pool, into which she was about to plunge, when she of the Pool, into which she was about to plunge, when she war cought is the arms of an Indian, who have her rapidly into the forest.

Only the Call him—call him, I by, Him II.

For the folian made her no reply. He rather the reliable form in his arms as if it had been that of a children by into the degree recess of the first, also a tree short in a substantial hands of her hair, and so steel them are a her path. In vain she coay to call; the child handy had not radely, had his hand up an her mouth, and so it also are

CHAPTER X.

IN VAIN,

MEANWHILD All was of the sould collect a in the facility of Ser Re and Vices, who, in head that the territory of the lear 1 Mather, and not support plain described and applied the description is with a control of the income the reservoir services.

Mistres Vines had what all the attends for the High and was had beauty to her side when she belief had had her had a same have seen, in the direction of the Polit had been adjusted in the latest had her had all the latest and the latest had all the latest had all the latest had all the latest had been appeared as the latest had been appeared.

For a in the side of the wath, where the thick mainstants from the milk completely consults provide hearing tenders, to your interest made the end of the leading tenders, but not propose came.

"She but hiles hered, sweetheart; be condition. In-Words.

"fook here, dame-sweethert, bit! Here is a letter her heir; we shad been fall her." And in his built a been of relief, he threw the trees over the neck of John Bonyton. He continued; to the latter:

"Make really for the voyant, lat. All will be well. They dere not lay a finger upon the precious head. I will defend her with all the power of the colony, and call in the Indians if not like. Hope has not the heart to say rood-by. The dur lamb is terrified, and sick at heart. I will aven to in limity put upon us by the e hypocrites! In faith, I will, and we will all most in lingland, dear John, and forget this day."

Thus did the stout man strive to ease his own heart, and stifle back its terrible misgivings.

The little ship, of scarcely two hundred tons, reaked in the offine, and the not unmusical "Yo-ke eve-oh?" of the soil is, as they weighed the anchor, and shock out the soils, a hardship by yourse Bonyton that it was time for him to go on sopposed. The youth stall lie to be and cut many a wisted look at the high rocks and done forests, in the year expectation of socing Hope make her appearance.

"My mirl mi vives me that all is not well with H po," he whispered in the ear of Sir Richard.

" Nay, may so a, sinch as been threatened; she lid a lard of rather than any for well. Do not he lite. I will write there to all is well by the next ship. I would have the analy to a this pople, along he alled his a lower to a

The point has by a feel this his by eathreat, which, at he time, we at have awakened effections of the property in the stall his ered and he had the took the options has been shall have constant his between the by, and she is her which ing a heavy dent between the eyes.

The white sile was set, the status weighed, to whether practice upon the series of impation voices used how to say the bait; and yet John by the linguistic of the batt; the subject to the case, where the design is the case of the case, wavel in a last of the case to consider the case of the case, wavel in a last of the case to consider the case of the case, wavel in a last of the case to consider the case of the case, wavel in a last of the case of the exclaimed:

fate!

There were adjurations and remonstrances innumerable. The vessel waited; Sir Richard imployed; it was in vain.

"I will not go-stand off!" he at length cried, pashing the people aside right and left, and making his way with long strides to the Vines mansion.

Mistress Vines, in a burst of maternal tenderness, threw her arms about his neck.

"Oh, my son! my beautiful boy! where is Hope? Where is Hope?" she cried.

The young man lifted her arms from his neck, and haked fiercely round.

"Have you hidden her away from me? Tell me truly. Let no one dare deceive me."

At this moment his sister Nancy appeared, and going up to him, said:

"I'm ashamed of you, John Bonyton, I am."

The youth glanced at her. It was evident he was nearly beside himself. He seized her by the arm, and shock her long, thin hands.

"I have heard your talk. I have heard you tall of the witch test," on the shoulder of Hope. Go to; if a hair of her head is injured, were to you and such as you!"

And he pushed her from the door.

In the mean time the vessel departed; the alarm for Hope spread; the whole village was in arms, and partie went here and there in wild conjectures. Whatever might have he at the feelings of Mistress Bonyton, it was observed that she did not leave her high-backed, flag-bottomed chair, but, with a handkerchief thrown over her head, leaned back, and ever and anon she was heard to crone, in a quavering voice and dismal tone:

"My heart is like a wilderness;
There the wild raven finds her nest,
And there the screeching owl."

The door opened, and Dr. Mather and Mr. Partilles encered, and seated themselves losd to her. Gradually the relationship in with the people of the settlement, who regards Mastuss Bonyton as at the head of the movement and ansat Hope Vines.

While all conversed in a suppose ! the Dr Maint inquired as to the liabits of Hope and the probabilities of her whereabouts.

White thus engaged, John Bonyton stalked into the room, and stood in the midst, eying the group with a stern glance. Through his elenched teeth he addressed the two learned men, who so confidentially talked with his mother.

"And so ye come a hundred miles or more to persecute a simple child—a poor girl who has provoked the ire of these fiends in human shape?"

"Beware, young man, that you do not bring trouble upon yourself by this intemperate speech," answered Mather, with compressed lips.

" ()h! I understand your tiger thirst for blood."

He strode across the room, and laying his hand upon his mether's shoulder, demanded, thus:

"Tell me where she is, mother. You and these men know; tell me where you have hidden her. Oh, mother! mother! bring not my blood upon your shoulders by conceating her from me, for, as true as there is a God in heaven, if these men, these theo'thirsty hypeerites, whem you, you, mether, have brought here to ruin Hope, harm a hair of her heal, I will visit my wrath upon them in a way that shall cause the stonest heart to faint. Speak, mother, speak, and tell me the worst."

The mother could not resist this appeal. She sprang forward and fainted in his arms.

There were ejaculations of pity, and cries of shame, and the chinary turnult sure to en nowhen a woman faints, in the railest of all which John Bonyton stood with folded arms. It was said to see the work of a few hours upon the face of the hand once youth; it had hardened into that inexorable expression which time gives to those who have greatly endured.

one word, mother!"

"I know not where she is, John. For thy sake, I wish it were otherwise."

Again John Bonyton went forth, and the people turned aside reverently to let him pass, for they saw the great grief upon bin And now he wendered along the pool, for many surmised that the poor child, in her terror, not let have period there.

Thus days and nights passed away, and the main properties traversed the forest, and searched the sea; but I all no more traces of Hope Vines.

CHAPTER XI.

"DESERTED ARE THE DWELLINGS OF MAINA."

It has be a shown how easily Hope Vines hall an solzel, even in the presence of her friends; for the two considences against her—that of the Pilmins to seize her pass a unit arraign her for withcraft, when death, in its hast appoints shap, would undoubte by have awaited her, and that of the Laures, who wished to exalt her as a will-seed subjection of the death and the unhappy pid full and gave that of the chars of her captors.

the process of instances of the process of the proc

Pland upon which of the flat the production of textures of the flat the production of textures of the production of the

The line of the content of the line of the Slowly, farfilly passed the days; there were no till a of H per Vares. Days parinto a outles, and the sense in the shaire and, and the search is the shaire and, where he had been for ver as educed with the force of Walter Rulein, in the min is not only of his himsen, but of the close is at large, grow to be a tile of the other time.

Threads of her looks A, silvery hair were helded to the second relies. The ranch charge of witcherst, when the charge of witcherst, when the charge calls has of reprehension, and people recalled medical bether next levelines and her bright, poetic funcies, which rendered her

"A thing of beauty, and a joy forever."

There were the a who remaindered those wend rfoll eyes of his, so deep, so bright, and yet to force that tupon the shies then upon the orth, and these delived her white looks in the looks an mirror with the rost of the Pool, and that her save the ly mind having its perpetual of and flow.

Only so that the river her well is suppressed brancy, and the strong to make by the Terrendees to obtain processed in a process in the relation of the strong ray, or mountain grow, where her creates in spiral their childs to great doubt, and help of the woman to come could be maintainly. Little Hope was for falling into the climate and marginally and a manner.

The facility of Sir Richard Vinc, never popular, as we have shown, with their and read his reparationly without without the normal of the Microsoft of the Month of the Domptons and others had protect to a popular manufacture of the entire of the popular of the control of the popular of the late of the little of the little of the little of the little profound secret.

The first and the first of the first property and the first test of the first property and the first test of the first property and the first test of the first property and the first length Sir Richard determined to leave a people by whem he was so little appreciated, and so little und retail.

He found himself losing that has The dand elasticity; which had once made peril and adventure like a back cult to his vicerous and bacyant spirit. He found himself wanter gwith John Ponyton about mountain and found and dell, you asing with indescribable sorrow over the last of errowhere his had been so free from all that could click high same; who a simple affections and poetic funcions required by the poets dream, rather than a bidge of everyday life.

But it was upon John Bonyton that the blow is at first light told, and upon him were meet permanently adda d the in-facecable marks of a life-long somew.

Mistress Bonyton had, from a missileniall n of h rown in ternal proclivities, as we have before intincted, properly har liferenous lessly to verve a fatal net around Helpe Vires, each of he for the induce world Helpe to near a characteristic for the induce world Helpe to near a characteristic for the principal near the form her principal near the for some near the principal of Mistress Vires, and profit her for some near near the credit our easy from which since the latter for grieved.

But when Heps really disappears I—when he classes it really be found to her whereat his, and when she are for all the real pears and a warped intilled, and she was every and with remorse and regret.

Solid the properties of the second to the se pressed forward, saying:

"(th! my son, let not special to you - confirt you, if I can."

Fire I along the colling security in the eye.

mothing of her fate?"

"Nothing-is there is a Gold in haven, I know nothing"

"Oh, mother! mether! there is still!! of upon your slines, I have heard your talk. It may be she has escapel a verse death by her present fate!"

"What mean you, my son?"

She was pale and trembling; she knew well the nearlier of his words.

"You know what I mean. A curse upon a people who forget the ties of blood, and the chains of humanity, to gratify an idle spleen, and call it religion!"

"These are strong words to me, John."

"What have you said? what vile calumnies have you exall at mother? You would have taken that innocent of the trute, harmless bely—that little incarnated spirit of highest girlhood—and have given her over to the brutes in home making, to torture, and drown, and burn, and have a they are now daing in Europe. This you would have dened."

The woman croacked down on the rock before her own chill, one let a label before him.

Self, and she trembled before him.

I have a thing of the each population of the I have shall seen a slept the each population of the cold mountain down than to dwell with hyperites and more devers."

"Allen, do not come me; do not leave my gray hairs to sorrow, to death."

ness in the hearts of these people."

y training the street of the process year."

"Never—por r, methal! I know what they had do in i to inflit upon Hepe Vi . Had shall used—to i she is a lare, on i a hamiltoon hall upon her, the likely that would have I howel would be up a year head, reliable."

He like I him of up and stroke away, enviry the constitute of the strike on woman to werp and writing her hards alone. He designed constant here her here, but Mi tress Bonyton was rounded the prophy of home we manufactor of the first II Minus Vines weight for a design of her son.

Entime the latter, in his long days and weeks' starth for the lest girl, about the file of least the pull north lived in the adjourns of the shapines of the shapines of the file of

The years man was convinced in his traction in realistical Hope had follow a victim to the same soft Ac. in , or the Spicer. He recalled for weals, "You had a find; you have a find," on i he felt the south of her into make we in a single the Terrentines. He sty as he from, he was a find the seasone, traversed the pathle of make is, as he will have cation stars from solitory mount an highest South a hours stockthilly can the faces of his inmute, and the other with a groan.

At least the great Hell of Sir Richard Viros mas content to the owner about a closed so the gwill held to the held to him by so many labers and some and apply to him still become the plant on product of Brain High. The removed his horsehold gots to the island of Brain and the which he held little to a maintain himself in connect 11 transactions.

Here we must till alien to the comply house it, which is no loner associated with the history of or comply had which, in their new home, because our multiply in prosperous.

Mistress Vines mow at leath the character has been at least of real and to my, in the mock splint of real and lead of the least of the

More than two leads of years have present only in the principal was less to deep, but a material of the principal of a constily has been been added to be presented to the present of the

To hear the letter short, a will be to be in the letter short, and the letter short, and

CHAPTER XII.

A MAN OF METTLE.

YEARS roll I away, but they brow ht no peace to the min I of John Bonyton.

His was not the mind to bend to the storm, and extract submission from the precepts of Christianity, or that enhanced philosophy which learns at length to submit to the inevitable.

He brook I upon his loss day and night; he never a rain entered the roof of his father. Knowing the atropious plan encorted beneath it, of charging Hope with witchersti, he could not endurative sight of those whose eraply he abhorred, and whose hyperist was too apparent to be excused.

The liter to sympathy with the colonists, he findly entirely count is like if from them, and providing whole time with the Soo Indians. Their sample truth, their hydrocal finds of his own their hard to a for, hermonized with the last listed soft his own character, and he had had had a form that any are the first an which his own populational him.

Grandy his limiter in this when, his dainer correct, his compared during health panel during the limiter in the limiter of the continuous continuous continuous cases with the reverse continuous cases with a plant, and he keep to him as one with a reverse.

the the limit of the first out of the first of the first of the first out of the first out

The content of the land of post and the concern of the land of the

Always a contenter of forms, after his election of saga-the constituted authority of the colony, which sometimes in voin to seduce him to the condition of good citizenship. Being called upon to take the cath of all gires to the colony, he refused, on the ground of his connection with the Saco tille, whose interests he represented.

The relentless colonists pronounced a decree of outliwry upon the unhappy man, and set a principal his head.

To these colonial per-centions were somethed the resent town and church; so that, but for his faithful filen is and allies, the Sacos, the situation of the high-spirits by anh would have been miserable in the extreme; but his own in lomitable will and fierce assertion of penental independence burn him above hardships and persentions which would have purallyzed a man of less mettle.

John Bonyton never skulked in typlic s to av it his enemies, but openly confront d them, willing into the town bravely, accoutered in his denies wage c stime, and henchtily bowing to soldier, civilian, or print, who might be seen with pale lips turning the first corner to avail the flery eye of the hanghty sagamore.

After the price had been put up a his head, John Bonyton might have been seen making his way at the early tailight of a winter day, to the house of the acting Governor of the colony, Thomas Gorges.

The family were engaged in singing the evening Lymn, when a loud rap responded to the lest a tend the sing is. The Governor opened the door in a read, for he do not be cowardice upon the frees of the singular tend to which we do not be bonyton stood erect, with ride in hand, and spiles is why and distinctly:

- "I am John Bonyton, Sazanere of Sac. What will you give me for my head, Governor?"
  - " How many of your till a do you carry at your hard, John?"
  - " Not one; I am alone."
- "Then I must say you are a fall triy man, John, and I warn you to depart. God hall! I should be instrument in shedding your blood."
- "Hear me, Themas Gorges. I shall go as I came, had no man will dere bay his hand upon me. Mark me, six: the abot that lays John Bonyton in the dest will be the signal for the brand, the arrow, and the scalping-knife to full heavily upon every man, woman and child in this colony. I have warned you."

He went as he came, alone, and no man dured, as he said, to molest him. These visits he repeated at all times, day or night, till the cross nurse stilled the fretful child by four of the Sagamore of Saco. So far from being subject to fear for his own life, John Bonyton became a terror to the people of Saco, who never ventured to put any of their edicts against him in execution.

Chief, as he was, of a Pagan tribe, John Bonyton nevertheless fit, or affected to feel, an interest in and need of Christian worship, which he did not fail to gratify when the interests of the tribe permitted him to be absent.

While in the porch of the shered elitice was pasted up a reward, and an ample one, to whom sever would bring to the Governor the head of the hands me outlaw, one clear summer morning, the inhabitants being as mbled for worship, John Bonyton walked in and read the "Notice" in a clear voice, and the to the people inside, who trembled in their books. He then stack a flint-headed arrow through the paper, and walked half-way up the central aisle of the little charch.

The minister was at prayer; but being an intropid man, and acceptanted to take a peep now and then through his closed libs, he did so on this occasion, and the prayer, ordancedly an hour in length, was greatly abridged.

There stood John Bonyton, ritle in hand, tall, dark, and defiant.

As the mini ter sail "amen," the women sank into their stats, but the men remained standing, for it was the custom in that early are and country for the people to stand in Irayer—not to kneel, as the reverent will, nor to sit, as the indolent do."

Turne was a brief pare, and the minister sail:

"John Boucton, what is your will in this place?"

"To were in Gol," was the brief reply.

"Hnow you not that a price has been set upon your head, and any man has the right to kill you?"

"Yea, I know it."

There was a cluster of thre-locks, and a stir of heavy feet, for every man carried his mustet into the house of God in those days, and worshiped and date the the testil.

John Ponyton certa flay eye cor the soliday, and waved his hand.

"Tell year people to strdown. I stail st al."

The minister give the signal, and the compating to seated.

"Come up herr, John Bonyton, unlish tyrn a. Cold faill that you should be shin, as was Joah, granting the hors of the altar."

"Themas Jenner, I pray the proof I with thy mid rations; no man will by hand up name. You pray and proof is; I will listen to you."

Where it the Rev. Mr. Jener provettle in journey, which has detected as efficient in the reason provents of the detected by a reason provent in the following formula to plant here the Artest of Constant of God, to held himself in really as to himself in really as to himself in the lines to himself in the first of all with the first of one when they crossed the Jerlan interther provent himself failing in which, the Jewsher transcription is the provent to be judgment of an offended Lecter and Judgment of an offended Lecter and Judgment God.

High God.

John Bryton, but he moved nor had nor for the had of away his eye from Canton platfor the form of the nor had a few of the nor had been a character. We had been been elemented to be a few of the transfer the control of the had a had a had a had been a h

The minister, leaning over the pulpit, said:

· The Breyen, I was a little of the Jenner, and replied:

lands, The American I will be the second

Where it the minister product I the best the include people, according to their want, to bit I bit, the hard first, and the wemen full value; and it was noted by that or my wemen turn, him to want limited to him has been a formally as the horizon of the form, and have the original and the property of the second to the form, and have but to glow with a rosy blush.

Lety, the minima come shady down the printer dry, a law in a down the minima on the north and the Days a site of the walk d, in a slow on terminal and more repetition of the will be along the liver-bank, and up the more tiagres. Nomendar lly lands up a bin.

of the the solt it. The Winds you its with breaks of his great backy, his tall, manly physically overlapping the homes made in a specific while he had should be overlapping the next of the parties, while his backy but unfrequent saids were the power of fascination.

CHAPTER XIII.

A LIKING FOR MISERY.

MISTIMES BOXION at both four tripose where the weary are at to 1, and None years here in 1, in destinate to the configuration of the co

- "This happened when your Ephraim, the creat go so, was spoonying about Hope Vines. Never shill I fact. Nancy, how he used to stand with his flug r in his mouth—hoding after test girl."
- "What do you think because of H per banks I Nancy Higgins, ignoring the spiteful remark of her sister.
- "I believe Satan carried her out he high. I no made helieve that she was stolen by the Indians, than I hallowe that brother Ephe will set the world aftre."
- "Never you mind my Hphe; it's easy to cry sarr grap.s.
  When you get your man we shall so—we shall so:"
- "There goes John, as true as I live, staking about just as though the folks warn't ready to est him up," coil i Per everance, making a rush at the door, at which she coiled, but liy:

"John! John Bonyton, look here!"

The sagamore turned with a grave slowness, and confronted the speaker in silence. His sister Namy new joing i her, and beckoned him to approach. He lowered the masket which he carried carelessly in the hellow of his arm, showing it to be loaded, and easting the but up in the grand, it give out a sharp, significant ring.

"What is your will, while its?" he will !.

Unheading this not very compilmentary epithet, Mrs. Higglas entreated him to enter her house.

- "Why should I enter your house?"
- you living this heathenish life."
- Beverance."

In a few minutes the woman was an anti-distance with the street in company with the tail and the anti-distance who moved toward the rade concerny, in which two shifts that the dast of the few of the collapse was and provide the act of strike of the world late the collapse was and provide the strike of the string soft to save sail violation that the string soft to save sail violation and the provide the string soft to save sail violation and the string soft to save sail violation.

Now and then noted by some a limit of the rounded with green tunf; but it was a local to the processor for nothing but the soling to the solin

In ellence the two preschedenward, and all against thel where the so I was heaped with unwonted care over a newly made grave. Perseverance burst into tears:

"She lies here, John."

The signmore leaned upon his gun—raising the helmet of plumes from his head, and as he gazed downward, tears flowed from his eyes.

"Did she die in peace, at last?"

" Yea, my brother, she deplored your heathenish-"

He waved his hand.

"What said she?"

- "At the last she was very gentle. She said she feared the people would bring down the curse of God upon themselves for some of their doings."
  - " Go on," he said, observing her to hesitate.
- "She said, 'I am ill at case about John,' and then she burst into tears, and cried, 'Oh! John, John, my dearest, best! Oh, that I could see him!—oh, that I could bless him, before I die!"

At this outburst of genuine feeling from his sister, Jehn Bonyton took her hand in his, and long after did Perseverance remember the groun that escaped his bosom.

" Said she nothing of Hope Vines!"

"Yes, John, she said she repented before God the cvil she designed in her heart against her."

" And you?"

As he a ked the question, his stern eyes were upon her face.

"I, John ?"

"Yes; have you no repentance?"

"I did nothing."

"Is it nothing to be hoose the tongue against the innocent?"

Do not tell me that you, Persoverance Bonyton, believed these ille statics, which you helped to promulgate."

"Wiser than I believed them."

He turn I mostly away to the woods, and Perseverance went her way, momenturity softened, but only to resume her hard and vin licitive that this, and become one in that argregate of filsehood and malignity which goes to make up harman society.

That might, when the village was baried in sleep, J has Bonyton might have been seen for hours, kneeding upon his upon its mother's breast.

If t till the member was deviced in the property of the proper

As he turned away from the grave in the brilling, he was surprised to see Ephraim Hirains starting being in

"I just come, John, to speak to you. I Wije lled you.
John."

"I am sure of it. You've a trat, heather, Illian, Illian,

'I'm glad you think so, John. I allays like I yest-you know I did."

"Then you would not take my lift, even to plan the Governor?" This with a smile.

"No, in leed, John. I wish I comb have a third from twish you'd come home and live black a Carrian, Jan-I wish you would."

Med poor, honest Ephraim grass i his hand warmly as he went on:

"I don't understand things much, John, and somethers I make your sister Noney fold asked to do not be to I mean their, I do—and we've got a loop—we have, and I is e'ena'most as purty as Hope Vines."

" You don't forget Hope?"

"No, Jean, no; I didn't think of her said to be the I did a cherubin on a temperature of make a large of the cherubin on a temperature of make a large of the large of the said large of the large of th know and hear nothing of Hope?"

"No. John, not a worl. By lock lock lock lock lock."

I of the text of the lock lock lock lock lock. I dealer at her eyes."

and goodness."

jest as all the rest of them duz."

- "That is true. What then?"
- "Don't you remember that Hope would whistle up a qual, with took; my charry north of ban? Well, the women to be lock as lock as taken at this, and say—five local disacy say it a hundred times—"
- perception of saying samething not jet what should be said and had stopped.

" Well, they used to say,

'Whietling gals and crowing hens Always come to bad ends.'

If women don't keep the right able of each other, it's a gone case with 'em, John."

- "You think they would have tertured and killed Hope out of spite, and called it religion?"
- "I den't petend to be as wise as year sister Nancy, John —h, thes year! I believe the Laby's wiser'n its own father; but I do say they'd a little her, and it's better as It is."
  - "Who would have had the heart to do it?"
- "As to that any of them. My wife Reacy would a holped, the would. You outly to hear her quote Scriptorial at whole and windle, and no remove is, and Molodo, and facility spends. Two set and heard her till every heir may held to be not. I think the women are kind of disappleted in a to a had a chance at her."

John Bryt normalliste the with Pry, and exclaimed:

"They will the hardject in direction, I'll be benell"

"That they will. The way they tell about remains and in the material of some is reall time is a constitution with the war, it taging a distribution is a constitution of the interval of the i

The Day of the state that the history of the state of the and droned on again:

"Yer was allow vi best and kind of upresenting by But his nothing here nor there to take. However or you can fix it, women ain't over'n above tendr. They kinder enjoy sufferin'. See 'em cry. They a juy it. I'm more tender der to our baby than Nancy is."

It is doubtful if the surmore heard half of this philosophical tirade of the kind hearted Ephraim. The san was now up, and admonished him that if he would escape observation at such a time and place, he must take his departure. Seeing this, Ephraim broke in again:

"Come home with me, John, and cut breakfist—break and ham and potatoes, John, Christian f. I, with a grace before meat."

"I have renounced the colony, as you well know, E, h-raim. I can not go with you; but I thank you in no the loss"

"Come, now, don't turn your back up on me, John Bonyton. It goes to my hourt to see you go away it in kith and kin, and everybody's lend agin' you."

But, before he had ceased to speak, the second regrasped his hand, and even, in an unwonted fit of softeness, obeyed his arms around his one simple, devoted fit his hand with many word, was gone.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE CRYSTAL STONE

Years, as we have said, had possed away sinto the disapparance of Hope Vines, and her mentry was had to all hat the Sagamore of Sico, in which has been it had been appreciated and yearning reminiscence, branched hat star very first of his life and being.

A conneil of the Sacos had been called many the report waters of the river, for the tille haldet real of the paragraph expedition against the Terrendless and Anores of the

The moon was at fad, and the sly be, y will, the soft wood and water, for the britte Indians of the point of the point of the point of the britter of the britter of the point of the point before them bound to a tree, the light of the mean conflicting with the ruldy light of the torch-flame of the council the, playing in weird contrast over her dark, motionless features.

As chief after chief arose and give, in a clear, solemn voice, his views regarding the campaign, it was observed that the sagamere distinct and frequent glances upon the captive. At tength he seized a torch and flished it full upon her face. The eyes of the two met, but not a word passed the lips of either. Returning to the council, the sagamore asked:

" Has the captive heard our proceedings?"

"No; the wind bears the sound away. The supling to which she is bound is beyond carshot."

"It is Acashee, the daughter of Sanowt."

The younger chiefs sprang to their feet, and would have build their tomahawks in her brain, for they knew of the story of Hope Vines, and the grief of the segamete.

The captive witnessed the oatburst with exultant pride, and began to chant her death-cour, with head erect and eyes flashing skyward, in words like the fellowing:

"Break out into laughter,
Ye thunder-bolts loud,
Wildly thereafter
Scream from your storm-cloud, Oh, eagles undaunted!

"By the warrior's hand
The maiden shall fall.
Light up the torch brand!
The torturers call
With pangs they have vaunted."

Thus fir, and the women from the camp, unwilling that one of their kind and a captive should ental to the hardline of of warriers, rushed out and threw water from their gourds upon her, and in decision tossed bean-pods and corn-harks about her, and jeeringly chapped the peddles of the cance, and the peddles of the frame, and the peddles of the front woman half her head high, but, furful of falling bear ath these femtions weapons, her head fell upon her bosom, and she was silent.

In the mean while, the chiefs around the conneil-fire sat long in a lemn concluse. At one time, the debate had been of more than usual animation, but at length a solemn silence prevailed, and the sagamore approached the captive, tomahawk in hand. She lifted her head proudly and looked him in the fact, while he cut the bonds and sather for

" (io, Acashee; go, Spider; we need you und."

The woman looked imploringly up, and even dashed her hands into his face, as he held her by the heir or her head, and cut away the long, heavy braids that dipresent therefrom. A shout of decision burst from the women, and an indowed her with lend and contemptuous jeers for hate the first. We say at length of their malignant sport, they returned to the camp, leaving the disgraced woman to make her way as best she could, through almost imperetrable trees, to her own people.

John Bonyton, having cut away the black had self Acasher, retired from the council. A cout had been applied to blood low the woman, never to lose sight of har, to been ricarding deligned after having seen her sady within her own tribe, to return to the camp, and report all account be ru.

When Acashee had depart a, John Booyton, implied by an irresistable desire to learn some his rot Hope Vices, whose fitte he believed was known to the Indian girl, belone it in a regath till he saw her throw herself upon the filler between the region there is the research part termine to a flerce, low erg, not unable that of the learning partner. She tore at her dishonored locks, and grass of her teeth in impotent fury.

The stranger, tall, calm and all at, stood before her. Instantly she sprung to her feet, and throwing back her head, cried:

"Pale-Ecced coward! I spit upon you, and will work a spell that shall consume all your bones, and !—"

"Silence, girl. You will not provoke me to kill you. Live, the scorn of your people."

John Bonyton," and she covered her three with her I.e. is, to hide her relenting tears.

The sagranore was softend, and hid his hand up a her shoulder.

"Tell me what became of Hope Vices, Acashes, and I will forget all the past,"

"She was called away by the Great Spirit." And her !

and tone seatoned.

"Ac shee, I know your felsehood and your thou had and Your thought will a You do not speak truth. Tell me, I be a hyou what eyes have put her, for I to i in my very oul that she live. She comes to me in my dreams, she walks by my silv in the force that—there is no spot to me where Hope is not."

"Hearme, John Bonyten: it'l knew, I would not tell. Hear me! She is dead—dead, a thousand times dead to you, and I rejuice to know it. The detectors of the modify star have taken her to their crims; why then should you so an Academ?"

Her dark eyes were fixed tenderly upon his list as she spoke, while her rich, clear voice wooed the echoes to melody. She had his her wrist upon his arm in her old secondive way, but the segment shock her off, and turned his eyes from her face, as he replied:

" (in him. Acasl.co. 20. I had hoped there might be ane tor had godness in that comillerers. (6)."

Truell of m ln -: proud segumore! Is it nothing to live entire to the gland with the live entire to the gland year?

While she spece, a wood-piceon alighted upon a branch near by, and with singular dexterity she caught it, and held it a helly to ber beschars most hirg and caressing its ruffled plumage.

Lin B agree waved his hand and turned away, while the transpress of stock watering his tall, receding form, the trees concents in a then, hashed the bird to the ground, say placed by typen its overcable brast, exchaining:

"This, and this, be the intend Il per Vines!" and she ground its inne ent blood into the moss group a soil.

The signal replanged into the roces is of the forest, and at lead to emerged upon the river-bank, where, as loy and youth, he had all delis days in the restaindream of love and youth, which so fills up the soul that the past is longetten, the feture had a with rainbow clouds, pavilioned with golden vaults and slivery sheen, thus explains the glow of the present by an on-ward gorgeous perspective.

"Lost! lost! all is lost!" he exclaimed.

United the light of the horomorphisms of the light as to the light of the light of "Listen, my sen! Turn thy steps to the east. Go!"

the wire can it was easily. He starched up an every side; no construction in the second very side; no construction of the second very side; no construction of the second very side; no in the second very side; no in the second very side; no in the second very side; not in the second very side; not in the second very side; not in the second very side; in the second very side; not in the secon

The inclination of an appeal of the promotion action and the wizard's will appeal that of the chiefs with a the chiefs with a the chiefs with the chief that the chief the chief that the chief the chief that the chief the chief and starte? beck with surprise. What did be beined?

One look more! There, throned in the center of the crystal, was a miniature image of Hope!

He fell headlong to the earth, he knew not how or why; a feeling of exultation—a something by which he felt as if all sense of weight, of obstacle had be a remove l. It was but a moment, and the sense cold, bony hand wrenched the crystal from his grasp, and was no more seen.

The impression, whatever it might be, remained, and without trying to account for what he had seen, a new and abiling conviction that he should once more behold the dear object of his lifelong thoughts took possion of his soul. He returned to the camp, buoyed up by brighter thoughts than he had experienced for long and dreary years.

It is well known that the images to be read in the "crystal stone" was a popular I diet with the Indians, though only a few persons were gitted with power of sight. They believed the magician may the originally endowed with the power of prescience, and he must educate and develop this power by a long course of fasting and incantation. They believed, also, that a person upon whom had fullen any great calamity became spontaneously endowed vith this rift.

The made for stone is a different species, used medicinally for the cure of hydrophobia, and the bite of venomous serpents.

This latter is of oriental origin.

The sackmore would gladly have left all, and followed the oracle of the wizard, traveling toward the rising sun, where he now is it some he should find Hope; but, as chief of the tribe he could not cast off the daties it involved, or forget the grave decorums of the office. He must await the return of the scout, and then follow the Terrentines and Androscoggins to their villages or hunting-grounds. Accordingly, he made ready for the eastern campaign.

CHAPTER XV.

ALONE IN THE WILDERNESS.

In the mean time Acashee went her solitary way alone, lashed by the force of sheme and revenue. So here being the will passions of her breast, she was time us in the Cichard or fatigue. She provide her to the mid-plants liber in this it she could crush the solvent alone with a form her, but where her recommendations visible of the Antiport cross, but when her properties as a visible of the light the tail, is she had a on the yearing boys of her people do, and with one fell slat-dash, severed the head from its body.

She forded the Saco river, not yet swollen by autumnal rains, and as the morning downed, she crawled under the shadow of an interpolity rock, and fell into a profound sleep.

Rising at 1 in the she wandered hour after hear along the upled to man and a view of the distant village, the vessel so aing out their white sails to the breeze, and the dishermen distance their nots to land. The smoke of the little hemiet to make unity upon the air, and the light tinkle of the herd-beli that the lowing of kine and the faint echo of the ax of the woodman.

One had Hope Vines paddled her light cance across the Sisteman her upon this upland, and here, with John Bonyton, they had idled away the long summer days, unconscious at that dreamy fature which had now made life a desert to them all.

To arise herself from these maddening thoughts, she stooped down an a saw her ghastly face and discrowned head; she bathed her hands and burning checks in the stream, sitting under a shelf of rock, has the should be seen by any of those who knew her in her days of pover and her days of heavy!

She will be it in worn moreasins and plunged her swollen for into the cooling wave. She sat long and gloomily survey in the alter 115 for. Her limbs were swollen and discolared 15 the action of the thougs which had bound her, and her feet 15 for the 15. All day she sat moody and silent, her how centrally district was evident that physical pain hed not her to do with the firee and an my passions that swayed her.

Academ may leave been perhaps between fitty and flifty years of a contract, having been exempt from the ordinary labor of women in the savege state, say precised between those her land a gular lines common to her say. Show as taller than the wont of Indian women, in teach nder then is eastomary with them at her person of hit, and altogether, she presented a lith ness and springliness on the rathet reminded one of Arab more than aborical lines. Her brow was high, retreating and narrow, with that I and should contract derive, he heath which barned her intense and restless eyes.

At her then liked her names of short heir, black as highly despited her toth violently in view of the inti-type which so the help in a type test. Short in her eliminately in a particular voice, and with a will, bitter

. . . . . . .

"I be Despited, I have my reven see, a then and times I have it, the spite of you, I will set a sin with chiefs and han sted which and show of my beeks even, no tender will wag itself and that. I am also we amilt eyond your malice!"

We could say that, among the Indians, for a woman to have per man cut off, is to cast suspicion upon her chastity. It is the only revenge permitted the husband for a suspicion of dishonor, but in the end, it is a sure and fatal revenge, as the woman is at once cast out of the tribe, and no one will grant her aid or succor of any kind.

Acashee pressed her burning hands again and a min over the degraded head, as donce more took up her march toward the rising sun. Day by day she traveled onward, now fording the ers, and now surmounting mountain hights. Bays and inless were doubled, and often some formidable river crossed on a frail raft, or traced upward toward its source, till her felf were able to wade it.

With the quick resource of sava relife, she had been alter to surply her own wants by means of the bow and arrow, the crae not, and the expert trap constructed by her own hands. She found corn and beans in the descript number launts of the Indians, and the woods afforded her pienty of wild fruits. Still, she grew thin and har ard, from toil, exposure and tray I; but her resolute spirit never qualled—never felt even the terror s which lacerated the body. Sometimes, she rested for whose days, and then, with renewed viror, pursued her solitary way.

Rarely did she venture to kindle a fire, but it might be traveler to some migrating tribe, or some will beast might be attracted by the flame. Sometimes her quick car detected the approach of an Indian runner, carrying intelligence to a for distant tribe. Sometimes she saw a group of hunters, who encumped together for the parsuit of the chast; then she would be compelled to make a detour to avoid them, or to lie by till they disappeared—for sooner would she by down her life than encounter a red-man in her present disher red plight. Her only hope was to reach her own people, and there explain all.

It was now October, but the season had preschere of exceeling mildness, and the birds, which usually desirt these northern regions a month earlier, remained in their summer haunts from some sure instinct, to enlive the whiter ass, and cheer its rude inhabitants.

Acashee now reached the Androscomin river, which, enominated by rapids and picture questills, can reverse ship of steamer, but which, in our day, has long incolored and less the purposes of the millwright, and asked he character of lorn and spindle to the grand cathedral hypen which alone, in the time of our story, aweke the echoes of the events had hills to the rear of its descending waters over shelving the analysis and hundred feet from its level.

Three the woman saw the fires of her people in the distance, and found a canoe with which she crossed and a region of the river. The sun was down when she reached the yallage, and the usual routine was being observed preparatory to night and skeep.

The chiefs late red open the ground, or pointed to the trophics of the chase, which the works a conveyed to the wigwam. Children gethered up their bows and arrows and threw themselves upon the sains, in all the alandon of dirty robes and muddy measins. Here and there might be seen a half-grown boy, grumbling a mild as he paced back and forth in front of the wigwam, carrying a stout bally "pack-a-back," while the overwrited measing prepared venison and parched corn for the evening meal of her lord and master.

Torches iter a to there here and there, and the whole female position when he belief it which household labor, when Acashee, thin, which is the self-burning with wrath, appeared before them. The was one but to decempt and scoffing from the women, which has showed taken with an anary gesture, and with an im-

1 .. . s were of her hand, appealed to the chiefs.

A come referenced, long and secret, which will be unfolded in the same. The honorable women of the tribe were instructed to minister to the wants of the warelever, and honors, such as even the honorable daughter of Samoset had never before received, were lavished upon her.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE UNSEEN EYE.

In all this long journey Acash a had not been alone. Sometimes shall be in i tood in her pleasay, which she supposed had been dropped by some tentily of carels has landry, but the had been purposely left by the segret ond any of the segret one any of the segret one any of the segret one and the next had been every at his discrepancy when had all the deals the design of the how of the how of the wolf through the night-watches.

The him he hear of the savare woman full d to detect this chip full werever in her treed. She had turn, I aside cares to have all Italian viders, concasts that her dehonored such the expose to to it suit and danger, except to those pair to heither and and hand the who would not to the expose that the explicitly and that esempt. Reversity, I are related at this charge, the scort was tributed to the reflicionities, and not only preserved her norm danger, that with a wind the "optivity and the could for her to the could for her than the could be could for her than the could be could for her the could for her than the could be could for her than the could be could for her than the could be could be could for her than the could be coul

On one occasion he even corried his protection beyond ordinary limits, for seeing her reel and sink to the earth from exhaustion, and fearing she might not reach her destination, he shared a rabbit in her pathway, and left cooked beans and corn slightly concealed under pine boughs, as it stored for the use of a hunter or trapper. These he saturated with the juice of a well-known narcotic, sure that a long and refreshing slumber would ensue.

Nor was he disappointed. Acashee eagerly availed herself of the hidden viands, and slept long and well, to go enward when she awoke with renewed vigor.

Arrived at the Androscoggin village, the duty of the scout was incomplete till he should learn the destination of the war-party evidently making preparations for a march.

As the chiefs of the Androscoggins sat around the council fire that night, and listened to the story of the woman—the silence undisturbed save by the heavy roar of the falls, now pouring in one continuous thunder-roar, and now suspended as by a lack of the freightage of water—a pause like a human breath—and then bursting into its never-ending dispason of selling melody—there might have been seen, prone upon the ground, a lithe, slender form, and a keen car, that lost not a word of all their plans, and a pair of bright eyes exulting in the knowledge he had gained of all the movements designed.

When Aca hee left the council, she did not retire to the wigwards that were offered her, but waving her hand, forbidding the women to follow, she descended the banks of the river to the foot of the falls, known to the Indians by the name of Pejipscot, and in our day as Lewiston Falls.

We must pause briefly and describe this most beautiful region—beautiful in our day even, notwithstanding the unjected talls have been subjected to the uses of the mill and factory. The river Androscoggin is a wild, coquettish nymph, now moving in stately grace amid embowering trees, and now bending into abrupt and startling curves, and anon plunging over headland rocks in one vast sheet, to sport again amid soft savannes and placed bays, once the mooring-place of Indian canoes when the tribes were bent upon some deadly enterprise.

In our day these warm and fertile slopes give place to collivated farms, from whence saise the rural sounds of flock and hard so grateful to the spirit, and that primitive blast of harm, winding itself into a thousand cohoes, the signal for the ingranering of a household.

Chills, erowned with the overhung the waters; hills richar hundreds of feet cast their dense shadows quite a ross to stream; and even in our day, the slim canoe of the Indian boy be seen poised below, while some stern reliet of the tribes its motionless therein, and gazes upward to the matient sites of his people, and recalls the day when, above the Fals of Polips of, a populous village sent up its council-smoke day and algor, telling of peace and the uncontested power and sway of his tribe.

But, in the time of our story, the region stood in its untamed majesty; the whirling mass of waters thundering to the level below in the midst of an unbroken and boundless forest; and the great root of the cataract booming through the solitude like the uncersing voice of the eternal deep.

Stalthily the Indian scout followed the woman to the base of the cathract. He saw her stoop her head to the overlanging waters, and she was sone. In vain he scarched. The waters, at the point of her disappearance, threw themselves forward in a semicroular curve, whence arose masses of vapor, up on which the moonbeams playing created a silvery bow, more lovely even than the gorgeously-hued rainbow of the sun.

He rubbed his eyes, he threw himself prostrate upon the ground to detect any shelf of the overhanging rocks behind which she might have hidden herself. An owl started from a hollow tree overhead, and with silent wing floated into the deep forest. An old withered crone tottered down the bank, and, seating herself below where he lay, began to gather vervain and hellebore, for the moon was at its wane, and she was preparing some witch-broth to be used in incantation.

Slowly pecting about, she turned over the lamp stones, and caught slues, and smalls also, and then a toad was dragged forth, and she disappeared.

In vain the scout examined every nook and every spot in search of the vanished form. Not a trace remained. He looked above and below the fall; all was silent—no vestige of a human being, except in a canoe drawn up under the bank amid a clump of bushes. He stooped down to launch it, in order to cross the river, when his arms were strongly grasped by an Indian, where garments were drapping with water.

He was old and white-headed, to tapertect Hercules in frame, and han had the young sport as if he had been a mere child in his hands. The contest was quick and decisive, for the old man raised the youth in his arms and dushed him upon the ground, where he hay stunned and bleeding, but with sufficient consciousness left to know his antagenist had hamched the canoe, and was pallling across the river. Rousing himself, terrified and sorely perplexed, he turned his face westward, and sought once more the people of his tribe, ill at case, feeling that the full object of his mission had not been accomplished. But, as the first duty of a soldier is to obey, so the first duty of a savage is to tell untlinehingly the truth, and he returned to tell all just as it had transpired.

CHAPTER XVII.

A REMINISCENCE.

We need not follow our nimble scout on his homeward way, a journey performed with far greater cell rity than when he followed the footsteps of Ac shap. Green meadows and mountain hights were left behind him, and with foot switt as that of the wild stag, and knowing as little of fatigue, he inducting reached the Casco Bay. Here he found a canoe secreted or leserted, which he took without scruple and launched fearles by across the water, the long strokes of the paddle showing him fresh as the day on which he started upon his adventures.

No sooner was it known that he had returned, then the comcul-fire was lighted, the pipe passed round in token of good, for the calumet was as indicative of loyalty and secreey in the eye of the savage, as was the rose to the classical world.

The young scout told his story in a few brief, frank were's, to which the sagamore listened in silence. He had been confident of learning something of the fate of Hope Vines, through this return of Acashee to her people, and now he so med do not be disappointment. He had, in spite of himself, dwelt up not words of the wizard, "Go to the east," and he left that there be should learn of the fate of Hope Vines. When the se at at length told of the mysterious disappearance of the wealth at the foot of the falls, and the no less mysterious approximate of the old man, his interest revived. He wanted the continents of the recital, and looked around for the continents of the chiefs.

All eyes were fixed upon War-ra-was-ky—a chief who had numbered nearly a hundred years, and who was scarred by had a hard-centested battle, renowned also for his great with a Rising slowly to his feet, and resting heavily upon his war-chief the old Nestor thus spoke.

"The words of the young brave awaken a mentry that has long slept in the caves of the past. List n, my brethers!

"The Great Spirit, mindal lot his children, has night pair hunting grounds with secret places, where they may his it in solves when the black cloud decends, and the air is ringing with hurtling clubs and lightning arrow-heads.

verted the sapling into a grarled and withered troe, car tries held power over the Andrescozzins. We do manied tried them, which they refused to pay. We barned their wig wants, elew their braves in battle, and chased them from their cities.

hunting-grounds. At length they made alliance with the Kennelson to 1 Penobscots, and we in turn showed the sole of the finite place of the white of the eye."

I a war-club of the warrior smote the ground, and his arm s with rare as he recalled this hour of detera.

Listen! We rabled again; we burned the village of the Ardroscorgins, at the top of the Pejipscot, where the great waters pour themselves in one continuous flood, as the young brave has described. The women sprung with their children into the beiding waters beneath. The warriors, few in number, stood on the rocks below.

arrows into their midst, but the rocks above impeded their flight, and there stood the bund beneath in one solid mass, and yet their numbers became less, till all were gone but a youth, who had all the while stool in front amidst the spray.

he spread his arms, as if he embraced the waters, and we saw his bely dashed from rock to rock, till it was lost in the gulf below."

A mercaur ran through the assemblage; the old man bowed his beat in homoge of the dannties dead, and went en:

eyes never lost sight of the spot at which the warriors disappeared. At length, one morning, just as the sun tipped the tops of the specient pines with fire, I saw a warrior issue from the spray. He cast an erger glance to the sky, and earth, and water, and before I could save him, he too plune of himself adown the cataract.

till, one by one, the Andros versing thin and powerless, showed the answer are less than the flood below."

The Sugarore of Suco arong to his thet, as the old chief ceased to speak

"There is a chamber under the falls, my father, is there rat?

"Then hast well divined, my son! And there the squaw-men who has the war-club and the arrow, hide their wellsh

L. 70 5"

"The Androscozains have joined the Terrentines and Kenndes, and will descend upon the Sacos with all their power. Let us not wait their coming. The the moon is full, we will spring up a ment path like the parther upon his prey."

The year or enick new to their feet, and responded by tam farfine, rhen still shaden eld deliner.

our power over the Andrew Time?

Such were the works of the young braves.

It was decided, as at one voice, to anticipate the warlike designs of the eastern tribes, and earry the war, as of old, to the ancient battlefields of the Androscoggins. The secut was in possession of all their plans; they would feast their warriors upon the banks of the Saco, and winter at the Pool, where Indian and white man were alike to fall in one exterminating blow.

The more cautious chiefs proposed calling upon the colonists to aid in the expedition, but this was overruled by the sag more, who declared the red-man able to carry on his own wars, and strike without aid for their old council-fires, their altars and their homes.

This audacity pleased the majority, which determined that the expedition should start upon the third day. They would descend the Saco—cross Casco Bay to the Kennebee, which river they would ascend till it receives the Androscorgin, and thence up the latter river till the Falls of the Pejipscot (Lewiston) should be reached—thus performing the entire route by water.

It was determined that two hundred picked warriors, headed by the sagamore, would be sufficient to effect the surprise and discomiture of the eastern alliance, which had proposed to wait till the hunting season was finished before they started upon their warlike expedition. But the Sucos bousted that the grass never grew in the trail of their warriors, and now, healed by their brave and untiring sagamore, they were contains of success.

But, before the tribe started upon this perilous enterprise, according to their wont they consulted the prophet of the Sacos, to learn the tokens of the invisible powers, for an Indian, no more than an ancient Roman, would not implously expose the public interests of the tribe without first learning if the gods approved.

Accordingly, the chief men resorted to his wigwam; they built the choicest venison, fish and corn at his threshold; then they lighted a fire upon a rock near by, and having haid herite it an arrow pointing eastward, and a cance with the pallies pointing in the same direction, they scated themselves in silence upon the ground.

It was not long before the wizard appeared, with sirns of exultation. Scizicz the arrow, he hurled it into the air, and seemed to urge the canoe onward; he shouted in a high key words like the following:

"High on his rock the bold eagle is ser uning, She in his wigwam the warrior is are wint. I here's a cry from the high-top -a cry from the plain, A shriew from the drambess that come herer again. Up, up to the battle, but hever a bow! Tp, up to the battle, but hever a loca!

The chiefs exchanged looks of doubt and surprise. The more cautious would have forced him again before them, but the sagamere declared the omens were for good, and directed to start upon their way. At once the two hundred were to be sen ture ding their way to the liver side, where the canoes were manned. Here we must leave them, now hugging the sore to avoid observation, and now holdly breasting the waters of the stormy sea. Headlands were crossed, not doubled, the warriors shouldering the canoes at "carrying-places," which greatly abridged the distance, the hazards, and the labors of the way.

CHAPTER XVIII.

SNAKE VS. SPIDER.

Acasimic astate, cautious, and devoid of all personal fear, was not without a certain natural power over her tribe, which regarded her with some degree of religious awe, interior in extent but not unaking to that which lent a halo to the brow of the unfortunate Hope Vines.

Accesive was skilled in all the incantations, dences, and magic of her people, and did not scruple to work upon their ter-rers, or to turn all their faith in her to her own account.

The character under the great talls was kept a secret from the pole at large, being used mostly for religious purpess, or in periods of great extremity as a last rallying point of the chiefs of the tribe; hence, comparatively few were acquainted with the place of retreat of Acashee, when the retired from the council, and waved back the women who would have importuned for with surmises.

Having planged under the jutting water, she arose in a gorgeous road, hing with panious of crystal, and furnished with sore indians, ashioned in the long ages by that instinct of there whill, hels her to indicate in solitary protess and overharing now is that intuitive need of weiship which is the connect ristriof our hungarity, even in its rulest shape.

Premient in the center of this vast channer was the stone of some in a configuration, which took plainly its use to immote be here and there the Manifest of the Prounding Colors.

Acash replaced in mont of this chartly object, and seemed to that here we in contemplation of that which so well harmonized with her own ernel and vancictive feelings. Intent upon her bug work of vengeance, desoid of all those gentler emotions which but a grace to the sex, while at the same time they present a barrier to great achievement, she stood with a half-smile upon her lips, as if already she beheld the object of her wrath impeded upon the bloody altar, and sent shricking to the throne of the appeared deities. At length she turned away, and prove slowly up and down the dlin area, which gave out a recipitalizer restless feet.

Here had for a western performed those relicious rites, so secretly hisblen, that to this day we are lest in daubt whether or not the northern Indians offered human beings upon the alter of sacrifice. Here were deposited the skulls of great claids who had perished in buttle, or been tortured by their elemies, and had died as became brave men.

Skins of sepents and reptiles dried in the sun, ben seed ivory, vases of terra-cotta, thoras steeped in blood, poished stones and crystals of vast size, were arranged in a niche beneath a stapendous trep; and here, conclude in crystal, extending fold beyond fold, dry from the dust of centuries, but vivid with the bues of life, was one of those girantic lizar is, an activate which might have crept in here before the deluge, and have stept undi turbed, an object of superstitious awe to these devotes of nature.

The grotto of the Pejipscot was not so broad at the entrance as might have been anticipated, but it extended back to a valuation, widening laterally till it became a gordons. Not into, rising arch beyond arch, speculing itself into interminable vistas, and assuming unexpected shapes of resplend at trace and beauty—columns from which hang the mest delicate tracery; pendents reflecting every prismatic hac; valls of network, as if the fairy flagers of the first had been arce test in their play, and their work rendered eternal in the schmanther tone; as if a thousand gnomes of the mine had here cell sto itter to sary, and here wrought a thousand fant stice-hape into forms of beauty.

It was mid lay, and the sin, penetrating the short of the falls, case a not uncheerful light into the case, the size and global which were still further relieved by a fire bounding in the contex, and one or more torches stuck in the fissures of the roles. With her back to the fire stood Acashee, gazing intently up a the white, liquid, and tunnultuous mass maich constant in the face and the half ation. A flore, context door or contain to this strange habitation. A flore, context pression rested upon her face, and the last flow weeks of the day affering half done the work of years in playing harons up in her brow.

At one side of the cave, stretched upon skins of a delicity texture, as if prepared to do their honor to whoms ever show i apply them to use, appeared what might have been mission for a white wait, excepting that a draft of air case I a postern of it to rise and fall, spreading the mannest, and so wait you to be a mass of human hair.

So still was the recumberd figure, so noticelles the tiny, moccasined foot just perceptible, and so guestly the has and abundance of the covering, that all suggested an image of death

-a draping for the tomb.

Acashee turn d shapin around and surveyed the figure long and silently, a mulignent smile growing upon her features. At length she asked:

"How much longer will you sleep, skake (snake)? Get up,

I tell thee!"

At this ungracious speech the floure slightly started but did not obey. Acashee laughed bitterly.

"You do not like skake (snake); you will be called Wa-ain (white soul), and be a great medicine-woman; but you are no more than a skake at the best. Get up, I say; the warriors are coming!"

Still there was neither movement nor reply, and the woman

continued, in a sharper tone:

" Hope Vines, I bid thee come and eat!"

The figure slowly litted itself up, and looked wistfully, and yet half defaulty, at the speaker.

"Acasinee, I will answer only to my own name."

"As you like. Skake is as good as Acashee. But the spider snares even the snake."

To this truism Hope replied only by a low moan, and settled herself upon her elbow, amid the masses of luxurious skins woven with wampan, and thinged with purple and pearl white shells.

To a stranger, Hope might have seemed but a mere child, and yet the mouth showed that a woman's thoughts and passions had been there, and the eye was a well of deep, fathomless concerns, while the grasp of the little hand showed that to child's fiver restricted its power. The arched foot bespoke the electivity of the tiger, while the small waist and womanly but tell of a thou- and latent chains of character which time had filled to destroy.

Rish, then her recambent posture, she approached the waster at the entrance to the cave, till the spray dashed itself upon her lock, while hecks, and the stronger light taking upon her bree, revealed the sharp, beautiful outline of her tree, scarcely to the lap e of time, and those weird, foreshadowing, limits the eyes, kinetics in intensity, the in the light, and nearly

He twhen beming with enction.

"Water! still water! forever and forever lapsing away, and s' il timy scal anat -away!"

There was a mournful pathos in the term, as if the speaker in it in heldisolve into the characturon which she gized. A mean at more and she turned to Acasace in a way which should not on little Hope of years agone was by no means broken in spirit, in the asked, sharply:

"Waste have you been, Spiler?-and now that I look at Tree I was their to an in presented but a tell of the little had .

Acashee grasped the hair of Hope fiercely, and her form towered and dilated with rage, but Hope was immovable, and with a derisive smile, said:

"You dare not do it, Spider-you dare not."

"What should hinder that I should hurl you into the abyss below?" she cried.

" We would only go together, as you well know."

Acashee unconsciously dropped her hold of Hope, and passed her hand over her own head, which the former observing, asked, lightly:

"Who did it? and why?"

The woman now scized her by the arm, and bending down, hissed through her clenched teeth:

"John Bonyton did it."

Hope Vines dropped to the floor as if a shot had penetrated her heart, and there she lay with no sign of life, to the evident gratification of the other, who left her to recover as best she might, while she busied herself in preparing a meal over the coals. Seeing Hope rise to her feet, and stand erect and motionless at the mouth of the cave, she called out:

"Skake, come and eat."

Receiving no answer, and perhaps weary of this useless teasing, she strode across the space, and shaking her by the arm, cried again:

" Come and eat."

"I will eat," answered Hope, softly, taking corn and dried venison. There was a strange light in her eye which the woman saw, but did not understand, for she went on in her former vein:

"The Spiler caught a bad snake when she wove a net for Hope Vines."

The latter covered her face with both her hands, and the veins of her forehead swelled above them. Yet when she uncovered her eyes they were red, not with tears, but with the effort to suppress them.

"It is a long, long time that I have been here, Acashee," she murmured, sottly.

"Have you never passed the curtain of water since Sancset brought you here?" asked the net-weaver; and she fixed her eyes searchingly upon the face of the other, who neither quality nor changed color beneath her gaze, but answered in the same sorrowful accent:

" How should little Hepe penetrate the vail of water? Who is left to her now?"

"You remember that I once told you, 'You had a friend:
you have a foc.' The white boy and girl shouldn't have scorned the red girl. Acashee is glad down to the bottom of her soid.
John Bonyton is more wretched than I am."

II pr's eyes dilated and her breast heavel.

"Tell me where yet saw John Bonyton, Acashee?"

"Oh, he wears the ear e tun bravely, and they call him Sagancre of Saco now." An i she haughed in scorn.

"Oh, the lour, weary years!" marmured Hope.

"Where is O-ye-ah?" asked the other.

"She died a moon ago."

"Del sie a de vou a great medicine-woman?"

Here we to her that with dignity, her brow contracted, and here yes givening with unearthly radiance. She pointed upward and said:

reveals himself to me. Acashee, listen! I behold you pierced through and through with arrows; I see you bleed at every pote.

The provid woman was awed at her tone, and felt that Hope had the mastery.

"Who shows the arrows?" she at length asked.

"Join Boryton, and the warriors."

The woman's head fell upon her breast, but a smile, fair as the smiles of the daughter of Samoset in her days of youth and beauty, stole to her hips as she whispered:

"It contents me so to die."

CHAPTER XIX.

THE PRIESTESS.

The prists of the Andrese wins appeared one by one within this vast temple or grotto which we have described, followed by the architectables of the tribe, each bearing a symbol indicative of his rank or office. It was observed that the Grand High Prist entered and threw himself before the stone of scerible in silence. His role was gathered closely to his person, but what was most or him as of all, he had covered his face will the wings of the last, which totally concealed his features

All eyes followed his movements, and all ranged thems ives in a circle tenich the overhanging such; low mouns escaped for this traction to the writted apon the ground, and spread forth his handers of fore cor. At leasth these words burst from his lips, in a low wall like one who is compelled to speak, when he would choose to be silent:

"Winner are the large of the late summer tree?

On the large of the large of the late summer tree?

Where is a large of the large of the seal?

"Where are the 'reaction march to the light?

Hark! 'tis the shricking of maidens I hear!

The warriors are gone—they vanish from sight.

Where is the battle-cry sweet to the ear?"

At these words, each priest and chief bent the head, and covered his face with his robe.

"The augury may be averted. Arise, thou cowardly priest, and prepare the sacrifice," cried Acashee.

They sprung to their feet and gazed upon the hold speaker, and she a weman. They accepted the omen, and gathered about the altar.

Acashee had bound a white the icover her shoulders; she had crowned her head with the haves of the sacred mistletce, surred to the Indian as well as to the Druid, because it is a parasite, and lives on the blood of anoticer, scorning the coarse, damp ground. She stood with outstretened arms, and pointed to Hope Vines,

"Take her and appease the spirit, and save our braves!"

But Acashee had not foreseen the awe with which the pull child inspired those children of the woods. Hazer to crush her rival—eager to immodate her upon the altar of her revenge, she had hoped to see them rush forward and hurl her upon the store of sacrifice, bleeding and quivering in death, and thus her triumph had been complete.

Hope stood calm and silent, her small hands crossed and spread upon her breest, her eyes raised upward, an image of saintly grace and purity.

Some thought of cest.cy, some wild dream of beauty, some vision of supernal reading, may have descended upon the sext of the lonely child, separated from kindred, and for years, as we have intimated, consigned to this solitary gretto. Her person rabed in skins of the softest and whitest texture, her bair grown so as to nearly reach her fiet, her skin of the purest while, with dark evebrows and bour block eyelashes, gave a depth and splendor to her eyes, dazzling to behold; and thus she sind in the midst of a race foreign and uncomprehending, every that a divine instinct impressed them with awe. The U.A. of the burning torches illaminated the far-eff arches, changing the pollerid pendents of the roof to topoz, saphire and rely, some ing vista la vond vista of snowy arch and crystal dome, resplendent in a thousand prismatic hues, and be in the ni t, like some embodiment of supernatural beauty; ad Ming chatter. compounded of the relemental forces which preside over a car and fall, such as the genius of Greece has left as the creatly seef the classical mind.

The Indians beheld her with awe, and inchthefacher. Twen the vindictive Acashee steed silent, spell-bound, by a spirit which had mastered her own.

At length slowly raising her head upward, sice spoke in a clear voice, and yet with a semething in its tone as if it came a 12 (11-11-1

"I believe the line of warriors—brave as the bravest. I hear the cry of devision,—the variet of the warrior. Slowly the mist is as a line of a ce the head of a woman, and before it fly the leave in a, a thousand pide spectors trooping to the spiriteland!"

While it psich she turned her eyes downward, placed her half upon the hold at her half upon the hold at her for an islawly moved away under the gorgeous canopy of every aring pearl and amongst, and disappored in the distance.

The Little list red exhast, and watched her receding figure till it dis prored. They coupled her predicts a with the ambiguitation with the ambiguitation with district lands and they became tilted with district and dismay.

In the long years of her imprisonment, ignorant of the place of her all the land in conscious only that its distance must be given from all that she had known or boyed, for she had traveled days or had the media before her engineers mached the falls, she had a pair had ever a give beholeting a white human face. She had had it is a taken while sleeping under the heal of the river, and place in the white human in this year of the second in this year to are it divine oracles.

To the to of the helica she had been preside; she had awad him by he forms Train vo; she had had him in subjection by a for relation proping, which came upon her, how and will a second they hence with proto the second section of the second second all the health had the departure of her father and all the health had been been but the name of John Bony-tank by a like the name of John Bony-tank by health her was presented by A. A. A. A. At that sound, years were anni-tank by A. Hope Vines trend led with the new iversely and a lemma and the receipt days.

William in the living which marked the action of her cities in the living the living the living the construction of the case, and the partial article of the case, and the action of the case, and the action of the case of the cities of the case of the first of the first of the land of the first of the grant of the gr people, she yielded to the romance which surrounded her with something more than content.

She recalled the story of her kinsman, Sir Walter Raleigh, with whose melancholy history she felt herself allied, and believed this imprisonment of hers was a part of that mysterious link which always had woven her destiny with his and she unconsciously resigned herself to the position for which she had been destined by her captors. By them she had been destined by her captors. By them she had been ablueted, because they believed in her supernatural gifts, and Acashee had lend lent herself to the plan that she might sever her forever from the companionship of John Bonyton.

Acashee had been compelled to avoid the Pool ever after the abduction of Hope. She could resign the man whom she had learned to love with a wild infatuation, conscious that he had never returned her love, but she could not resign him to a rival. Blighted in her own hope, revenge took the place of the gentler emotion, and the Indian woman felt a strange delight in contemplating in her own mind the misery she had occasioned in another.

A party of her tribe having been sarpited by the S.cos, and herself taken prisoner, Acushee had a run belief John Bonyton, and filt a revival in her breast of that fidal love which had for years been the bane of her existence; but when he had recognized her, when he had out away those locks, as precious to the Indian maiden as the smood to the Highland virgin, or the scalp-lock to the warrier, her hatred knew no bounds, and she resolved, with the consent of the chiefs, to hid there if in the sacred cave of the Pojipscot till her hair should grow again, and where she might fast her eyes upon the misery of Hope Vines; but silence and solitude are great prompters, and she, who had come to revile and torture, found herself awad in the presence of one whose claims to superior and supernatural wisdom she had heretofore met with derisive skepticism.

CHAPTER XX.

THE VIGIL.

Thus passed away many a night and day. Hope waited and watched and hoped, but in vail. Her companion never relaxed her vigilance, but her cold fromy, her malignest snoer, had given place to a deforeact and uniting to two. Hope was called grave and taciturn; her old freakis, ness had all long, and in its place was that quiet, burning look, ailied only to subdued passion.

At length Hope divine i, from the preparations made by her keepers, that some important event was about to transpire. As midnight approach, i, a group of the chief men of the tribe chief men of the tribe chief men if the spray at the chief men of the grotto, and so it is iven in front of the contact fire. Barning torches we appear that arches and the cave glowed with the chief the procedure of the contact fire in the center.

A ----, be a longer of one who had a right to command.

Here's process of the state of the stone of sacrifice, contact is nowy for a construct mannerted with watering, at the indeed ever son, and in here matic, spread at here to be Several densitive polyshumbere haround the fair and myster assigns the higher, while the parther had placed his broad head upon her shoulder.

As Acas report back and forth, she sometimes proved in factor of this bainty of the week the carry and rage that contents the indicate provided in the factor of the color of the factor of the provided in the factor, as the provided to perpound imprisement of parts of the factor, as she domed, from John Bonyton, that a may that how you for the torque, because of the protracted misery of its object.

More than one, as Aquate thus pauled in front of Hope, the patter raised black if into a conclusion attitude, and eyed her with a side or gland, as a cut will watch a mone, which she is sor is with a reach, and the refere may be allowed to gambol with impunity.

At least, As all est qualitar weary pacing to and fro, and but it with it to a massive state tire, and eyed the example to a line of the example t

Halling in which the white expect of the sumptions and they will have be a name of a part of dark, bright the specific part of the part of in the eagerness of the intent ear.

"His tar sand arrival!" aske! Acash.e.

"West to reclaim to a later to Andrew in the Andrew in the " " n will the Sacos be upon the trail?"

"The maters." I waters."

"Why and the remainst Ways sittered all invite the tennewith teach them what it is to follow the trail of the Androscog-

The theree fervor of the woman was not lost upon the council of chick, but they replied, gravely:

"Listen, dangister of Samoset! Thou shalt wear the engleplants, for thy commare and thy wisdom are becoming to a chief."

" When arrived the Sacos at the meeting of the rivers?" asked Acashee.

"As the sun went down."

" Where is the Sagamore of Saco?"

" "He leads the expedition."

Act, here walked back and forth, and then stooped over the coach of Hope, and distented. Apparently she slept, for she returned to the council-fire.

It may be that the effort at concealment had been too great for the nerves of Hope, for hardly had the woman turned away when a low sound, like a harma wail, escaped from the carely Acashee again bent over the recumbent form, but there was no sign of consciousness, no winking of the eye, no perturbation. The panther rolled himself over, stretched out his claws, and throw back his head, showing his long, red tongue and glittering teeth, and ut and a yawn so noully a howl, that the woman believed the sounds identical, and the warriors resumed their discussion.

The an hour the moon will set," said Acarbice.

"Our young warriors lean upon their arms. When the moon is down we light a rise as a time of points. They will there leave the signal for the Terrentines to join us. They will there leave their cances in the hands of the women, and join our warriors on the bank below. The fire will warn our prope how near to approach the falls, for the night will be dark."

"It is well planned," said Acashee.

"Has Wa-ain (White Spirit) spoken?" asked an old chief.

"She has had a vision of battle."

"How went it with the Androscoggins?"

"There is nothing but victory to the brave," she answered, evading the truth.

The old chief was not deceived. He eyed her with a keen, penetrating look, but said not a word.

Presently the group dispersed themselves to rest till the moon cloud set. The quardlens of the cave inverted the torches, and a dim, sepulchral light played over the features of the sleeping warriors.

incontations supposed to augur success in any contemplated en. terprise.

Waiting till all was silent, Hope gathered her little flyure closely to the floor of the cave, and slowly made her way to the entrance, nearing which, the rour of the waters made her movemen's less perceptible. In breathless silence she passed the council tire, and the aded her way amil the group around it. She was carries in it farless. A chief turned in his sleep: single the twith the ning eye. Her hand grasped the warclab beside him; had be newed again there was no mistaking the dealy proposed the girl; but he dept on.

Her step was now firm, her air determined: She cast back a Lurrial giant -d. w. . -i. at. With a bound she plunged and the world of waters. A moment more and she stood upon the

I dy partial the fet of the fells.

The me a was nearly every and a thick mist hang over the river, of while the shall form of Hepe seemed only a part Sand it rat a second and ance a set but burnich clance at the mental and the second of the second second the indicate of the section is the facility steam, and the Buck Prince, positive its life reporter its shelving steep.

The national and a state of the parties of the state of which and with the interest of the state telesche bie bis. Se impiel onward und she tound " the hope of dry wood and telement Still-Water, and with the lite of the section of the lite. See watered the british to the bound of the bound of the properties and the crlander with the strain; tiven handles there is the walth of the by the women in the ir was a little and the best secured the dry pieces restretted in the linit in the linit method of the land the transfer of the world to-£ " ... ".

( _ a liver at iter arms and relection.

Same to the line of the property of the descent of the property with a representation of the last faint in sunk beneath the ment and their tentraling my shet upward, and then litile - yer iv to the best in the line.

The tribe with the infire.

Quit, in the Principal sign and high coming the old woods far and wide.

CHAPTER XXI.

DEAD ASHES.

JOHN DONT N and his band of the man had ascended nearly to the first of the Pojip cat Felis, waste they waited till the The in all had est, and the state were distanced by dark charge.

which flitted across the sky, and now and then disburdened themselves in heavy drops. Gusts of wind swayed the old woods to and fro, and sent the autumnal leaves whirling and eddying on the wings of the fitful blast.

The signmore had not slept, but his chiefs were conched under the overhanging trees, amid the dense underbrush, and all were burich in protound slumber, while he had whiled away the hours in thought of her who had been to him the one star in the sky of his destiny. He knew that Acashee would never reveal the secret of the fate of Hope; therefore he had counseled to liberate her, and note in what direction her steps should lead, and he well divined that there Hope would be found.

While thus the solitary man gnawed his heart in vain regrets, and sorrowful fancies, he became aware of a movement faither up the stream. Now and then a spark shot upward, and was lost amid the white spray of the fails; then another, and another struggled amid smoke and vapor, and was lost; till at last one fierce volume of flame towered apward, revealing not only his own encampment, but the vast of I woods, and the river pouring itself, an ocean of water, from its mountain-hight into the abysm below.

The warriors sprung to their feet, and gazed in wonder, not unmingled with dismay, but the sagamore motioned them back to their covert, while he should learn the secret of this unexpected beacon-fire. Emerging from the covert of the woods, he was aware of a white form that flitted before him. Hurrying onward, he leaped from rock to rock, vainly striving to reach the object, which still cluded his trasp. At length, having reached an angle of the stream, the figure turned.

"Hope! Hope!" exclaimed John Bonyton, stretching out Li-arms.

The figure pointed upward, but even while she made the gesture, she fell prostrate to the earth.

"Oh, my God! be mercitul!" cried the sagamore, limiting her in his arms, and even while he spoke the strength of the streng man departed, and he sunk down trembling, for to him it seemed as if the spirit of the girl had fled.

The years of agony—the lapse of thirty years—were continued trated in that moment. All the dall, dreary, lingering a less of rolling months and lengthening years were combined, and plunged into one vast pang.

At length Hope lifted up her head, wringing her hands, with a free white as snow.

"Oh! John Bonyton, did I not tell you so years ago? Did I not see Hope always alone—always desolate?"

.. " My poor bird!" : ...

Their heads were bowed down, their breathing faint and inbored, and low mosns escaped them. What was the world to them! Stricken and changed, living and breathing, they call knew that they live I and breathed by the panes that reveals i the leading prise.

Oh! He, he: then art a fearful been, and thy leve not the least fearful of thy gifts!

At length Heperem mbered the beacon-tire, and Joestant 1 willly to her ret, fir if the thane decayed her work would be . st; but there was no fear; the flames had kindred a tall and i ck, he are with the moss of ages, and this poured terth relthese it hery tengues, lighting the seems with militian a liand world have speaken, and world have speaken, but the significal health at tirmly in his arms, and smoothing back her white hair, he murmured:

"The thirt never have mentain, my tender, my beautiful tird! It has hered ill with thes."

It was a melicicle ly contrast—he in the full thish of his nohis man, A. gathaing the diminative creature, like a lat i and, in his arms-he, tall and commanding, she bleached by s ili ... i grief.

Similar et this he filt, for a peternal tenderness cancel the tears to guita to his eyes, and he kissed her brow reverently, saying:

"How I have sourched for thee, my birdie! my fair child! I have been haunted by the fairies, and gouded well-nigh to Hope!

Sat listened intent and breathless; sile forgot all clse, all but the intermediate value, the munic of her life; but, hearing these last words, she cried:

"Why if you pover the vast waters, John Bonyton? I kaaw it we in the so. I knew, if we parted, we could never be the same again. The same cloud returns not to the sky; the same linen. Il mis not twice; human faces wear not twice the summed and and along the heart of to-day is not that of to-morrow."

Hereys indien fixel on the face of her lover, but as she venter, they were med up and mem his injug eyes-up-Date it is a line to brow, and government into the far-off and ....... with a writi, wirid carre-thes, as we have seen a chills by a final as the spirit found its way to the crystal games

. P. F. . . .

Les - ... in re - ... l to listen when her wice had ceased;

the state of the second of the

"S. T. ar annihilated, aud the relation of the state of th

"Let be an an Baston!" circl Hope, convulsively, at the second

"It, merer ter in! We will live the old life—the life of Waiten The directional years ago, Il get."

A faint smile played over the lips of the girl, but she whis-

" When the terch is consumed to whe, no power can rekindle the flame."

"Do not speak despairingly, Hope. We will not rejoin those cold, hard hypocrites whom we both ablier. No, no; look up, my child; take heart, dear heart. We will build us up a hower in some lovely dell, where the birds shall sing all day, and innocent creatures resort for love of thee, and we will worship God with true hearts, and live as the bouttiful Miranda of Shakspeare lived, only instead of Prospero it shall be Miranda and Ferdinand. Dost understand, love?"

While the sagamore thus poured out his poetic rhapsody with beaming eyes, and looks unatterably tender. Hope's dreamy eyes were fixed on the vapors circling the fails, which were ever and anon swept asile by the gusty wind which stirred in the bare branches of the trees. It was evident that much in the mind of her lover was to her a seal I book. Perhaps John Bonyton felt something of the kind. Who has not, we some time, poured out the mainthoned whath of a seal upon an arill desert!

Perhaps he felt that his thought was not her than the-his low was not her low, for he replied to the dreamy eyes:

"Yes, dear Hope, we will be content to think, not talk. Thou shult call me brother, as in the olden time, and I thee, si ter."

"John Bonyton, Hope is no more than the old Hope. Than art—right royal."

And as if this expressed more to her than its words would seem to convey, she for the first time threw her arms about his need. Then she pressed her hips to his in one wild, particularly the party of from his arms.

"For the first and the hat time," she had exclaimed, "therethere do I steep my soul in thine. Non-go-go; I can not live to see thee book with a weary heart—a 1-774-ret, upon the

How who is all thine."

While the solitary child, pure as the unmanned crystal that burns from the cave in which she had been so lor ginema, depart expression to that unfutored tenderness which she fall twis to be a dream of the past, the sagamore stilledly started forward, and pointed to a high rock by the margin of the falls, upon which appeared the tad higher of Acashee. Hope saw her with a file tender, which was not lost upon her lever.

A in the finite, and a croup of anazed in the recrestricken were is easy pick the share by here ide. They hive hip their hands another the first spectrole—they adjust from rock to rock in decree educts to extinguish the field bidge, but it vain. The forming handself to very him harrid splender, ending firth jets of thane, an object of bradty no has then of terror. And now the Suco warriers, reshing from their ambush, dealt sure destruction the oad but Acashee, who stood unmored and the Little I. In this dil she invite the blow, by chantrag, in a veire while resear of the falls and the roar of the beacon-fire, her flery death-song-she stood unharmed.

CHAPTER XXII.

BELOW THE FALLS.

MINISWITTE the begin thire had flamed far and wide, and will the will is to the anticipated work of destruction. The ferrence of the anather and of the Androscorpin, with war-club, telling the later of the first tengence upon the to it the beaconfive stream lating uptile in only selly, then they launched their canoes and descended the stream.

The Andrew in the will their little navy above Still-W . r. i . . lei were and with the very flower of the tribe, and Land to the time to the State of Secondard his band of water to see the terms to hear than the chord which Me ris danilled the interportation lost itself in the rest ocean. Such was their thought,

While the and the comments of public, onward came the till i t, ... it to con sport to the explant bearts. The best seals sadyed healy; the might-hind wheeled in The siperial and went sereming away to comper solitades. The interest the fex and the heating of the west minded with the species of the own, and the seices of a the usual ill-Charles of the second in the recess of reck, mountain and mer, and put cannot went the fleet, theon cious of (i .: : ::

The season of the light the leacon at Similar the thing the tented to their feet with horror, as car a contract the man the shadow of the river-inch. and the denward-past the traistream, past the village lights, and we constitute the continuation of the state

It is the ville of the falls, the we men and children, said and with which should should and in the property of the propert Intil to be the state of the second to be in t gura, as the strain at armed the wentiled he put to stay the downward sweep of the freele need, caught in the tieree tide of the rearing waters.

Ever and ever poured on the untiring flood, till one wondered it did not pour itself out. The heart grew oppressed at the verness of its images, crowding and rolling and pressing, as did the tumultrous waves over their rocky steep. Water—still water, till the nerves ached from weariness at its perpetual flow, and the mind questioned if the sound were not silence, so longly was the spell—questioned, if the sound ceased, whether the heart would not cease to beat, and life become extinct.

The winds suddenly died away; the stars came out each upon his golden throne and looked down upon the scene. John Basson and Hope stood not far from the beacon-fire, which sent its jets of light far and wide.

sald also a wild, unearthly yell filled the air. It rose loud and pletcing, and the roar of the waters was lost in one vast, terrible cry of agony.

The chiefs of the Sacos gathered about their ragamore. Hope pointed to the white toam of the falls; her eyes dilated with delight; her form expanded, and in that moment of exultation she looked like some beautiful, but averging spirit.

"Look, John Bonyten! Behold the handiwork of Hope

Vines !"

A black mess gleamed amid the white form; another and another; and yet a wild yell of horror—a black, descending mass, poise lone moment upon the verge—a fearful plunge, and the old river took up its ancient song, and went its way to the far-off deep, to be lost in the vest occan.

"Tell me, what is this?" cried John Bonyton, seizing the hand of Hope, and conscious of an undefined horror at a nameless denl.

Hope saw the changed look -saw the flerce eye of the sagamore, and her high spirit quaited before it. Exultation gave place to defiance, for one brief space, and then she waved her hand and would have deried away, had be not detained her.

"Tell me, Hope, I beseach three—tell me the meaning of this dreadfil scene—more terrible than the fiercest struggle, foot to foot, of armed men!"

"I have saved thee, John Bonyton," whispered Hope.

"Tell me all, Hope-what it all means."

She lifted her head proudly—she fixed her deep, dark eyes upon his, and speke with a clear voice, that reverberated here-fully upon the silence.

I at one thou, ht—one de sire—one aim—to seeth a oree more. I will not tell to e of the long, long, weary years—winters of hearty frost and snow, standars of bridthearty—which went and came, and I saw the manet—I saw nothing but thee, John Penyton. I was morely and silent, but a power was born of solitude, of waiting, of long in a and I could so and come beneath you ler falls. When all sept. I went forth to look upon the more,

I coarse it lighted thee. When the sun came forth, it rejoiced me cray that its reps were like and light to thee.

No one knew I early find my way out of the cave—no one is each the cave brains then his that consumed my whole life. Literally I heard that no me; I heard of the approach of the See, I by J hi. Bryton; I listened to the council of the chief, and hamelth at a beacon-fire was to be kindled above the in, as I then the tribes would descend the bank of the river, and carry death and de truction to the camp of John Bonyton.

"I him I' I the leaves I that I have the falls!"

more. Where will you go?" cried the saga-terly.

"II . h y - je he je, e me to me; all is black, desoiate-do not leave me."

See less with sopple a face, so hopeless, so mournfully tender, it was affecting to behold.

I will go unter the fills, and there sleep—oh! so long will lish p. John Brayton. The wounded doe seeks the deepest covert in which to die."

She turned away, but the segamore, rushing forward, folded her in his arms, saving:

"Yet must not enterme, Ham; do you not love me?"

Signal swered by a low wail, haste cloquent than words, and it was in a but to her sets aboved her utterance. At length, so look but the with a wistist, carnest gaze, and answered:

"I see it all new, John Bony tom. I see that Hope is a child, y had a man. Hearme say it all—I am a child such as I was years ago; yet are not the John Bony ton who played with peblic apparent the fact the carlo-plume! Look at the eye so call and terrible! My heart, my brain, has been filled while the eye the property of the its John Bony ton. Look into my so that has been recent—only one record—John Bony to the property of th thurselve in the tas, and if the strong man feit the tranchild shown in the less tender, nor the less terrent in his protestations of unchanged and unchanging love.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE TORCH EXTINGUISHED.

The sun began to tinge the sky with its ruddy hue; the birds filled their little space of late autumnal song, and the shrill cicada piped amid the rustling leaves. The rainbow spanned the abyss of waters, while below, drifting in eddies, were fragments of canoes, species and bows, and stal more ghastly fragments, telling of the night's work.

Upon the headland overlooking the falls, and hidden by the heavy but stunted vegetation of the rocky hight, stood a small graup of ancient warriors, the sole remains of a once powerful hand. These, after taking into their unvialing minds the terrible truth of ambush, deteat and death, so can any to the village to hasten the departure of the women and call hear.

Not so Ac slice. She watched intently the group below in the midst of which the sted the white, abund at books of Hege Vines. With jedous rage she saw the sugmatore told the salant form to his breast; with wild, jealous admiration she noted the manly form, the bright, tender eye—so fierce in its last look upon here if, when he cut away her virgin locks, to a rule as it tell upon the face of Hope.

As the extreme of a forly merges into a sousation of pleasure, so the malign pressions of Aceshee were prolonged in this contemplation of the ton lorness of the losses, and she could no more one dure, and she drew an arrow to its head, aimed at the heart of her rival.

Hope started, gave one last look of love at the lar amore, and then darted up the brook, up the projection corve of water that indicated the entrance to the grotto, and thence disappeared. Her path was marked by a long trail of blood, staining the rocks like a stender scrpent.

Agasiree did not fly. On the contrary, she boldly stool equation ties beed and, and it was a grand sight, the full, further women in her proud attitude, standing there courting the death

She had inflicted.

"Acashee is averged, John Bonyton," she cried; but her velocities stepped by a hundred arrows, hurtling the air, and proceeding a rulesh—"blood from every pore," as Hope produced. She did not quail, but, with a buoyant motion of feet and arms, she sungher death-song:

&quot;Lenk from your misty tayes, he to an idea approaches, the distribute shows that a maidea approaches,
Shit by brave warmors—she brave as the lost,

Arrow after arrow drank her blood while thus she sung—and at length she toppled headlong into the boiling flood below.

Figure was the pursuit and desperate the flight of the surviving Andrese grins, and the Sagamore of Saco, with his followers, never rose i, day nor night, till the last vestige of the Terrentines was rooted up. To this day, in the viliage of Lewiston, now a thriving and wealthy manufacturing city, the new settler, display the fluidation for his princely mansion, often uncarths had-consumed brands, and, sad to tell, the small skull of the child, thus designating the site of the old Indian village, and attesting to the teath of that tradition, which still preserves the incorary of the description of the Androscoggins as we have described, and the confligration of the village above the falls of the Pejipscot.

No white men less ventured to solve the mystery of the Vines.

As my is still extent to this effect: Many years ego, while Leadiston was a small village, retaing its Indian name of Pejipseet, a young man was standing on the shelf of rock, which we have described, and where we have often stood ourselves, spellage, I by the majestic scenery, when suddenly, from amidst the face and spray, appeared an old man, and stood upon the rocks is the him. His hair was of a snowy whiteness, but his eye had a with the fires of youth as he beheld the white stranger upon the rock.

Expetie latter could recover from his amazement, to inquire at his a least, the old Indian solzed him in his arms and dashed him to the attribute when he recovered to book about him, he was his against a register public phis can be down the river.

For yours Joing District lineared about the falls, in the vain district sector being the published beauty of Hope

Viers but the present no mercin the their

il. With a light store of herstery, and to this day, men not read to the first of the scale affects, slight and her in the cital in showing somewhally about the first of the street of the the which of the vivial street of the which of the vivial street.

The it is the memory of the beloved of the Sagamore of Saco.

In the second second second the Sacos at what is now he will be set in the word is the second second

At his view here it to be buried in the "grave-yard" of the commission of the day, but gave directions for his repose not far from the beautiful falls of the Saco, within the so and of these waters which had witnessed his serrows, his in attitudes and his triumphs—whose roar had been to him a perpetual inspiration. Here for yours, was pointed out the rune stone, with its no burnot epitaph, which marked the grave of a man born out of place.

The epicapia of John Baryton run in this wise:

"Here lies John Bonyton, Sagamore of Saco; He as a larger, same and a larger, same and a larger, and the larger of the larger of

This up cracious thyme was current in the colony of Maine somewhere about 1684, being the spir sphof a man little undershift in his own times, and greatly traduced by the pen of noveitst, it not of the historian. When the reader understands that Robomoko, or Hobomok, was the Indian appellation for the father of lies, it will be seen that the sarcasm or slander, which ever it may be, was the more inveterate.

THE MID.

BEADLE'S DIME NOVEL SERIAL.

THE SILENT HUNTER;

OR,

THE SCOWL HALL MYSTERY.

This poverful remember of Indian and Pronfier Life was a first to I in B. He's Dime Novel No. 111, (The Helpless Hand, by Captain Mayne Ruid,) and is in addition to our compact V. I. It will be entired in our regular issues, making a complete Novel and a complete Novel and the continue in our regular issues, making a

by sending to

BEADLE AND COMPANY,

GENERAL DIME BOOK PUBLISHERS,

No. 118 William Street, N. Y.

THE SHEET HUNTER

CHAPTER V.

THE SILENT HUNTER'S CACHE.

THE trail was clear and obvious. There were the marks of the Indians' feet, of the girl's moccasins, of the cow, and the grunting drove and then as they went along, and were driven into order, or goaded to advance at the point of a lance. They were able in this way, with so sure a track, to proceed with considerable activity and case, the puore that the route was a beaten trul which the Indians were wont to use on their many friendly visits to the Crow's Nest, where hitherto they had been received with extreme friendliness by the hearty them, when quite a boy, against their hereditary foes.

They trod upon the trail then, one after another in deep silence, matil the wind began to sigh over the trees, the gloom to collect overhead, and the forest began to a-sume that mysterious and solemn appearance which is always presented by extensive woods on the first approach of night. It was about a quarter of an hour before dark that they came in sight of a stream, one of the tributaries of woodman, who had often hunted with them, and even fought with

" Hist!" said Custa to his comoas, who were moving li-tresely on, Harvey admiring with the eye of an artist the ch produced on the leaves by the er mooding reflecting on the past, ing on the future.

All three stood instantly like statues, though a tremulous nervousness shook for an instant the of Harrod. Then they deep shadows of the interior of the forest. In another instant they saw that it was an abandoned tire, in I to a later to the transfer to freely into the small open space by the banks of the stream. All that side first, and then on the of the whole party was gone.

"This is Indian devitry with a vengeance," said liarvey, angrily. have they hid in the trees?"

"Hist!" replied Custa, "there are ears in the forest. Look at the stricken pine—he has no tongue he is silent as the tall tree of the forest that rocks the hummingbird to rest, and sings no lullaby that can wake the echoes."

"If he ain't got a tongue, and a location is inconvenient to him," continued Harvey, smiling, "he has got eyes-look, he has found something."

Harrod was on the other side of the stream near the fire, and when they joined him they found that he had discovered the hones and some small parts of the cow, which had been slaughtered and in part devoured. The horse was also . . . . 1 12 .. just behind the bushes, cropp.. ;

could not go far away. "Ugh!" said Custaioga, in a low Whisper.

"This is the queerest start I ever saw. I guess we've got an ounce of dust in our eyes, or we can't see for the dark. I suspect

The Silent Hunter shook his head. "Water is soft, and carth is and the state of the last the state of the state of and ______. '... t. i' '

, . .. In a strained to the the production of the producti the first the print will rub a all products in the canons, and have walked. But they are not (Jons: they will not decente a Wyan lot. In the morning we will Livi their trell."

"I suppose you are about right," said Harvey, "and that ve're bound to wait. But this is a hotthe place for a camp, I conclude, Casta. My scalp kind of crawls at the idea of sleeping here."

The Silent Hunter made a sign for them to follow him. They clearly understood by his manner that he had a better place to show them, and they had already, by his directions, entered the bed of the river in an upward direction, and were fifty feet from the fire, when he clutched them both violently, and imposed solemn silence by a gesture which was not to be mistaken.

The gloom had now settled on forest and plain, the song of birds, the gobble of the turkey, the ery of the sandhill crane had ceased, 2º al lace at the late to the termination of the late whispering of the trees, as their heads met and kissed, and that of low, hushed, broken chord of some Eolian harp, that often accompanies in vast solitudes the retting of the hot sun—the fall of 1 That he is it it course to a serie ton heard.

But a step was in the forest—a step advancing stealthily, it is true, but with some little want of caution at times, as if the benighted stranger were sure of finding friends round the fire which he saw blazing in the distance; for the woodmen had purposely roused it from its dying state and made it blaze on high.

The Hadensk I took of the colonia the of coldback of a dist very extreme etter; or and story mount, listening with the ear of Brind dar F. Francis him their back to some a const, but It was too have Similaring with the click carre in and of Market and the would have the first will yel, and then he that Herelled diagrams.

near the tire. Harrod, who had done this deed, went quietly back, tinished the unfortunate wretch, and then came to join his companions, who conversed in inaudible whispers relative to the conduct of Harrod, which was clearly that of a man who had bound himself down to a mission of revenge.

In another instant he was by their side, and passing them, led up the stream toward what the two hunters well knew as the Devil's Gully. They had implicit reliance on the woodcraft of their huge and fearless companion, who knew every turning in the forest; but still they had so often, d. . . ; panther and deer hunts, visite: the spot, that they could not understand how he was about to use that place for the purposes of concealment.

In about ten minutes the water began to rush swiftly by, the banks came nearer and nearer, they were wading far above their knees, and then they stood at the mouth of the Devil's Gully.

The night was dark, but, their the gloom, they could distinguish the principal features of the scene. The banks of the river were now suddenly projected upward to a hight of fifty feet, about half the way up precipitous rock, with a there, the other half a shelving mixture of earth and stone dotted with trees and shrubs. Below, in the depths of the gully, all was dark; even the silvery thread of water, that in the day, when the sun dived down to cool its rays in might be seen running swittly rambling, rushing, dashing by like the waters of a sluice.

Harvey could not restrain an exclamation.

"I is almighty grand!" he s.il. "I they don't beat

"Hillo! where is he?" exclaimed Harvey. "He ain't carried away by the water, is he?"

"Come," said Custa, again; there is a trail in the swift water. Let your hand never leave the left rock. The eyes of an eagle could not see—we must feel like moles."

the rock, that he thus walked on a ledge, that was scarcely covered by the water, which swept furiously by, deep, within two inches of where he walked. They moved in utter darkness. They saw nothing their hands; they heard nothing but the swift current to their right.

Harvey was advancing, still wondering when all this groping in the dark would end, peering forward to try and catch a glimpse of those who preceded him, when suddenly his hand slipped from the damp, cold rock onto what appeared stubble, and he heard the voice of Custa by his side instant of before.

"Wagh," said the Indian, whose manners, language, mien, actions, were one continual struggle between his savage and civilized instincts, those of childhood and those of manhood—"a beaver in a dam, a fox in a hollow tree, an otter in a hole, never made such a cache as this. Wagh! it is good."

A torch which the Silent Hunter now lit with his tinder-box, revealed to Harvey the nature of the place. It was a niche in the rock, about fifteen feet high, ten across the mouth, and as many deep, overhung so by the two banks that even a fire could not betray it, while even in the daytime smoke would have been dispersed ere it reached the summit of the eache, when you came up here

afore there were any settlers in these parts."

Harrod bowed his head.

He had fixed the torch in a piece of wood which had been cut and planted for the purpose. He left the two friends to do the rest, though he showed them a hole in a corner, where there were well, deer-meat, a jug, and some skins. Harvey and Custa quickly made a fire and cooked their supper, which having finished—in this passively imitated by Harrod-they lit their pine and prepared for a "hig t.....' on the duties they had to perform—duties which did not affect them in an equal degree; for what can equal, what be like, the earnest solicitude of a passionate lover, whose mistress is in the hands of such ruthless beings as the wild savages of North America ?

devoted Wyandot, did love Amy with all the wild ardor of his half-tamed nature—loved her, too, without hope, without future, without an idea that his love coul i ever be aught save a dream—and thus, perhaps, had his affection risen to the greater hight, as it was invested with a melancholy and sadness, which to his way ward education, was not without its charm.

Custaloga loved Amy, the affianced bride of Squire Barton, for whom he had an instinctive dislike, which, however, had never manifested itself as yet in any way save that already described. He ignored his

liged to reveal midd the day and learning when some them here as the major which we may not raise, even though, from the journals, notes, and letters between the start which we may not raise.

pered Harvey, as soon as he had ladel his pipe to his own with-Laction.

Custaloga looked not to the right or left, and yet his eagle eye had caught the outward character of his occupation in an instant.

He was whittling.

In his hand was a long piece of line-wood, which he was striving District into the with his horting hand. After some labor he succeeded to his satisfaction, for he ceased and proceeded to bore a hole through one end, through which he afterward passed a thong. He then, with a grim and 500 1 1 2 ... . 1 1 me 1 1/00.

All this while the two friends, who were thinking over their lans, had watched him in silence. but as he cut the notch Harvey gave a cry of surprise and horror.

"It's a tally, Custa. Hundred thunders!" cried he, "what a mole-eyed, one-eyed gunner I am not to have seen it afore. It's a tally, and that notch is for the first Indian. Why that stick will hold a matter of two hundred."

"On the waters of the wide l.l.e," said Custa, holding up his hand toward the north, "the red-Francis is the first to the fir Our white brother cuts a mark in a little bit of wood. Carry it about like the little gods of the priests."

"Bah!" said Harvey, "not our priests; you will confound the

It mans with us."

"They all worship the same Father," replied Custa, in a low tone, talking rather to himself than to Harvey; "why does one Transit of the state of the sta ( .. t.. - . . . . As yet religion l. 1 1. 1 : j i ... ! his heart. He tall ' orl ( lai ' aty to a contained by the letter Year had bel and to alst hilly about Jane had both striven for years, aided by Clara's father, to open his eyes.

The Eccentric Artist made no really and which the enter my on a topic which had often induced

He smoked his pipe with remysterious awe at the bereaved husband, whose kindly nature and warm heart appeared to have utterly fled before the fierce, untamed passion of revenge.

To speak to him he knew was useless now while the night of sorrow and wrath was on his soul, good on earth, and prompting Lim only to deeds of darkness.

"Harvey," said Custaloga, when he had smoked his calumet pipe in peace for some time, "my heart is very sad; the singing-bird is safe in the wigwam of her father; but the queen-bird is silent in the lodge of the Shawnees."

"She is, Custa," replied Harvey, moodily, "and must be got out, if we fight the whole tribe of dingy catamounts."

"My brother," said Custa, affectionately, "is a brave, and not a boaster; he talks of fighting a Charles D. D. Bather I. - L. t. mean it. The Shawnee villages are as many as the weeks of the year, and each village has more warriors than there are days."

"Then by all the b'ars in Kentuck, what is to be done?" exclaimed Harvey, impatiently.

"When a fox sees a fat partri in the grass he does not fly at it, because he has no wings; he creeps and glides, while the birds nestic; and though they do fly, he is quicker than they, and runs into the woods with his prize."

"I understand you, Custa; you are up to some devilry you learnt among the Wyandots. Well, well, it's your natur', Custa, and I won't gainsay it. Besides, in the woods it's right-I know it is. Indians ain't regiments, and forests ain't regular battle-fields. What do you propose?"

The young Indian rose to s There was none of the semi-concated gentleman about him now. He was all red. He laid down his entimet and his rifle, and assumed heated arguments between them. all the dighland mien of a chief and a warrior. The two white men looked at him—Harrod vathat deep earnestness, that strong affection, which, by some strange instinct, the secret of which he little knew, he had always felt for

"The Shawnees are women. There are beasts in the forest, and birds in the air, and fish in the and warriors in the great hunting-ground under the setti. suit that they are to har to har to the forest, too idle to shoot the bird, too stupid to fish the stream, too cowardly to fight with men. There are a few long-knives in the wigwams, and grow corn to make themselves their bread, and hunt, and fish like red-men, doing them no harm. And they buried the hatchet, and smoked the calumet the Indians. But same la is with the right arm, . I had the late I have continue to the continue to the continue of spoke fiercely, and then his voice sunk to a melancholy softness that was quite musical in its deep, mellow sadness - "they came like not walk, and stolen the little ! .. deer, the son of the The second secon they will gaze on warriors; one of them has already seen the face of Custaloga then developed his

There was an Indian v. . . ... about nine or ten miles off, and though in a straight line, the way was difficult, yet one used to the woods could go and return in a night. Custaloga believed from his intimate knowledge of the triber to which Technical, - to young chief who had saved Am: - along d. that the price would in the first instance be taken to that place, as the nearest, and also because it was close to the village of Tecumseh himself, who doubtless would claim Amy as his prize.

"But how do you know it was Tecumseh at all?" said Harvey.

in the woods. Can you read the little marks on a book?"

"Well, Custa, what a question;

you know I can."

"And an Indian can read the print of a foot," said the warrior, with a grim smile, as he saw the pun, but could not check it.

Now for an Injun to make a joke about the print of a foot and the print in a book, is mighty ueer," put in Harvey; "wouldn't Jake land had have her putity teeth. She'd say six years' study had done you good, too."

Custaloga remained silent a moment, as if ashamed of his weakness, and then continued his explanation in the same dignified and solemn manner in which he had commenced it.

He proposed to enter the villago under cover of the night, trusting to his skin, and discover, the first the line of the his skin, and discover, the line of the l vey, moodily. "I don't like it. Custa. A pretty kettle of fish if you get took."

Custa, simply.

"I know you won't—but you'll be worse," continued Harvey, sulkily.

"Casta will not be scaled to be he had her long burs," said the Indian, agrain.

-if you are round, you'll make tre les and run."

Casta made signs that he would, and then began taking off every Tartir'e of dies that I should like an assumption of civilized garb. In an instant he stood almost in a State of rature, an apole (v for a tunic beginning at his waist and hanging to within four inches of his knees, and his moccasins, being his whole dress. He then took from his hunting-bag the necessary materials, and began 1 This glimm if with good care. Harrod, however, quickly took the matter out of his hand, and 1...i i. d hun ell's reliefly, that Harvey quite started.

And see very be said, whereigh

"Ugh," replied Custaloga with the deepest guttural sound he had yet uttered.

"You know she don't like you in any Indian fixings—but in that she'd hate you."

The young warrior looked very grave, but made no reply. He was ready, and standing up, his ritle in hand, his horn and shot-pouch hand, his horn and shot-pouch hand, ing from his naked shoulder, he was a large of the large of

"Nonsense, I'll come down the gully with you-"

"The night is very dark, the stones are slippery—stay—the red-skin warrior will go alone."

his race," said Harvey to himself.
"Ah me! it's a risky thing, a very love with Amy."

And thus roused, his ideas took another road, and soon led him on to think of Jane; and once directed into this current, he lost all recollection of every thing clse, and which come sometimes in the still solitude of night, whether we lie in down-beds, or on the hard rock or grassy certal, with the lie as but the canopy of heaven.

At last Harvey fell asleep, but he did not sleep long, for when his eyes opened again, the fire barrat still britarily, and H. v. 1 lay in so deep and heavy a slumber that he could searcely have replenished it. Harvey sat up, lit a pipe, and his thoughts turning toward the young Indian, he began to feel extremely uneasy. What he had undertaken he knew to be perilous in the extreme-one of those Indian artifices, which succeed sometimes from their extreme boldness and audacity, but which are attended with an amount of danger and difficulty which make them rarely used, or only in extreme cases like the present, where the feelings of the actor impelled him even to the verge of rashness.

with pity. He lay still now; his stormy passions, his fearful sorrows, his regrets, his anxieties, his burning desire for vengeance, all at rest; and perhaps—who can say?—some sweet and cheering the line of the night was his, given to his soul say in the night was his, given to his soul say in the night was his, given to his soul say in the night was his, given to his soul say in the night was his, given to his soul say in the line of the night was his, given to his soul say in the line of the body derives from cessation from labor.

"He sleeps—poor fellow, I must not wake him," said the artist, learless spirit, that warm-hearted though wild hunter. "How hushed and still this place is! Ah, what is that?"

He leaned down carefully in the dark shadow of the rock, clutching his rifle, as a heavy body was clearly heard allows. On the opposite side of the gully the bank tously, and then sloped back—an inclined plane, covered by shrubs and trees. Through these some body of considerable weight had raised his rifle, expecting every minute to see the glaring eyebalts of an Indian looking down upon them from that hight. The noise continued, the bushes parted, and that had horrid instinct, the presence of moonlight.

ose to the edge of the cliff.

then without a moment's hesitation, he fired.

A roar, a yell, and then a bound, roclaimed that the savage beast had fallen, or made a spring at them. Harvey instinctively drew back to clutch his knife. The smoke of the gun prevented his seeing any thing at first, and then he beheld the panther, which, wounded and bewildered for an instant, had missed its aim and fallen into the river, preparing for in orrid tongue, just as he preartist shuddered, and dropping the stood with his back to the his long, keen hunting-kuife presented at the beas, the handle hammer hit, I don't think.

would have eat me up slick. Well, you're off again, are you? You take it quiet I expect. I don't. I mean to have that skin—it's a land."

And taking only his knife, Harvey descended onto the ledge, and Line of the may down the The last the the little her . ght than in the evening, under the influence of the moon's pale, cold, and quivering rays, that drophad here and there through the open space between trees and boughs. He advanced the whole length of the gully before he saw and a second the manifestal to the t but there at the mouth of the ravine it lay by the bank, motionless, still, quite dead. The tremendous force of the woodman's ax, wielded by such an arm, had caused death to be instantaneous.

Harvey, who now was a rude trapper—"a mighty tall brute. I expect that skin will make a fine rug for Miss Jane—so, lest the wolves should tear it, which wud be a pity, I'll just skin it on the spot."

And he did. He drew it ashore, and there, regardless of danger, laughing at the wolves, forgetting his own lesson to Custaloga, forcerous Indians were about, he sat down, and never stopped until the skin was quite clear of the carcass. Then, and only then, he started on his way upward to the niche, carrying his prize in triumph.

occupation, he went soon to sleep, (Timerica VI.

FROG'S HOLE.

MEANWHILE events were elsewhere taking place, which are so essentially necessary to the proper understanding of our narrative that we must leave Custa to perform his journey, the inhabitants of the block to grieve for Amy, and she herself to continue on her way with the Indians, while we introduce characters who will have much to do with the clucidation of events, and the clearing up of the mystery which attaches to a very large portion of our narrative. The early events of our story have, however, been, in relation to incidents, so ray id that we have not been able to turn to what may in the outset appear a subject of minor interest, but which will in the end be found to be absolutely necessary to the understanding of what follows. At some distance from the Scioto river, up toward the hills, hitherto chiefly frequented by wild toppers and men of the works, by bordermen, and by a race of some bandits left by the war, horse-stealers, cow-thieves, and others-about three hours' hard ride from the Moss, and an equal distance from Scowl Hall—was a Emaily, log, or tarn-house, which had obtained, from the locality in which it was situated, the name of the Frog's Hole. It was notorious by name to most of the wild bordermen-had been used as a place of refuge by runaway negroes; but was chiefly the rendezyous of the abominable race of White Indians, or renegades, who played so infamous a part in the war, and who, as outlaws and outcasts of society, were compelled, when they wished to meet for the page of conspiracy or amuse-1 t, to which some sport where they were safe from the honest white men: from the Indians they had nothing to fear. Here it was that the spies, too, of the British army were went to quarter during the war; and here might often be seen Red-Bird the Shawnee, Simon Girty the ex-American, now the bitter enemy of his countrymen, whom he had betrayed; Captain Peter Drayer, a Canadian, once in but aided in bringing up a supply the service of England, now a wanderer; and here, during the war, the celebrated Captain Duquesne had often organzied his expeditions.

A small and beautiful glen, with pine and larch and elms bursti from its fertile sides, conducted! the waters of a pleasant stream into a little pool or lake, which, after barring up the entrance of the valley, again fell away to the West, and by a winding course gained the Scioto, and then the Ohio. A path round this pool led, by a number of steps in the rock, to ara tiel size, opening on to a platform, upon which was built, leaning against the rock, a house of somewhat antique appearance for that part of the world. It was built partly of stone, and partly of wood.

It was a praint of building, the inn of the Frog's Hole. For about tive feet from the ground it was of stone, moss-covered, and fastcand together by plaster. Treat rose a wall of planks, supported on the inside and the ent by be and of wood that reached to the first story, which was a kind of loft, made use of as bedrooms, and to be reached only from the outside by means of a ladder. The house was longer than it was deep or high, extending some distance along the rock, and showing such a goodly I of children to hold out a promise of plenty within. And plenty there was for those who had money to pay, as Ralph Regin was a man who respected his customers, and took care they should want for neither meat nor drink in his house. There were hams, and ribs of beef, and l of mutton, and fowls, and turkeys, and corn-cakes and hominy; but whence they came was another thing-a question, however, which none of the visitors ever asked. And there were whisky and Hollands, and brandy in profusion; and whence these came all knew, for few who frequented the Louise of fiery liquid, which sometimes brought more wretched Indians about the place than was agreeable or pleasant.

The platform, when the bridge was crossed, circled round the house on the side of the pool, which it towered over by some tairty feet—a steep and rocky descent of great difficulty, and which never would have been attempted in the face of a resolute enemy. it was, however, here that water was drawn up by a bucket, which laung over the part where the pool was shallow, and showed the gold-sparkling.

On the evening of the day before Amy Moss fell into the hands of the ruthless gang of Shawnees it is that we introduce this place to the notice of our readers. It was a pleasant evening, and the rich tide of sunset fell with deep low on the mossy walls of the .in, and illumined the face of a looking down with thoughtful mien upon the plain below. She was about nineteen—a tall, handsome girl, of rather bold and decided mien, as if accustomed to rude life and the companionship of rough men, especially those who frequent inns and grow boisterous, maudlin, or ferocious over the demon drink, which, let a man's prejudices be what they may, is an awful master to get

: e had bright, sparkling eyes and white teeth, which she was and short woollen petticoats, an t red stockings; the whole neat and

.ler character will better appear from our narrative than from any description.

"Father," said she, suddenly, in a cold voice, as of one who spoke that word from n ... rather than choice, "there is a traveler crossing the dylac."

"Who on airth is it?" replied a thick voice from within.

"Well, I don't know; I think it's Ezram Cook, the peddler-merchant."

"My!" said the other, coming out and shading his eyes with his hands, to catch the ligure of the liis eye fell first on the deep foliage of the forest, which could be seen mellowing away into the far distance, golden and sparkling beneath the setting sun; then it came down to where the trunks and roots of the trees were left in deep shade; and then it settled upon the figure of a man moving along steadily on a horse with a small pack.

Tractical T.

"Well, it is Ezram Cook, I do declayre; he's been up selling and collecting in his money, I expect. Martha! thar's one with a mighty good craw coming to supper. So you're a-looking out for him, are you? He won't come here tonight."

This was said in a half-sneering. half-anxious tone, as if the speaker hardly knew how the listener might take it. He was short, thick-set, and powerful in make, but every thing in him was uncally. He were a deposite capt close over his low forehead, which formed a perfect pent-house over little round gray goggle eyes, that were forever moving restlessly about, as if afraid each instant of Indians, or constables, or something terrible—he could hardly, perhaps, say what. He were a thick beard over chin, face and upper lip, so that little could be detected of expression, save where his thin lips, closed over his pro-Trick to held the little : It strike al balance. H corduroy trowsers, and huge, heavy boots made for contending with mud and swamp; and his name was Ralph Regin. He had once been hestier at Scowl Hall, years before, but, werected in a theft,

had left it, and never been seen a ... in, until one memorable occanon, hereafter to be described, when the negroes said they saw him lurking about the premises.

A terrible murder had been perpetrated about the time of his disappearance. An inoffensive Dutch : 1'. F. with a very period with a literation child, and possessing, it was we.i known, considerable wealth, had been murdered near his home house fired, and his wealth, family and furniture destroyed with it. A. The Wassolf Committee in its effect, that when there came neighbors from the nearest station, it was reduced to a pile of ashes, and was ever after left a memento of a terrible and mysterious tragedy.

"I know better than you," said the girl, after a pause, "that he will not come to-night. His beauty will not be here."

"I reckon not; it ain't likely; the boys ain't up yar yet, and I don't conclude one or tu will like to go down to Crow's Nest. Harain't no chicken, I know. He'll fit."

"Of course he will, and I hope he'll kill the wretches. What does he want with this work?

She is to be his wife—"

"Wake snakes and walk chalks, my pretty Kate," said the ugly innkeeper; "not so surc-"

"What mean you?" exclaimed the girl called Kate, clutching his aim.

"Well, don't be so raspish. It seems she don't convene to him lucional when of thereigned don't like to break off, and jist right away, but she's riled him a few. Howsondever, he knows she don't like him."

her? Why will he not give her up? He must be meaner and baser than an Indian."

The last the state of the state quick. She's rich, and my! ain t she bootiful-sich cyes, and sich a I ...

skin; she's about the smartest gal in these parts."

"Raiph Regin," said the girl, advancing close to him, "what is the meaning of all this? Why am I tortured thus? Did you not say she never should be his, and that I should be his wife? Speak, I ask YOU ?"

"Don't hollo! I ain't deaf; I wish I was. Lor! a catamount's nothin' to a 'ooman. Well, I did say so, and the mole-eyed varmint shall, tu. I've sot him a riddle. S'pose I say s'pose "-and the fellow laughed-"s'pose some few of Injins war to be afore them spekilators, eh?"

"What mean you? Give her up to the bloodthirsty red-skins?"

"You're mighty pertiklar, you are. But they ain't too kill hernot by no means. She'll fetch ten thousand dollars, she will, and no mistake; and I go halves."

"But what is the use of all this? He'll be angry, and that will not serve me."

"Kate, now du tell, what on airth makes you like that varmint?" said the other, imploringly.

"Ralph Regin-for I can not and will not call you father-will you ask why the wind shakes yonder trees? Will you tell me why the panther will come to one particular place to clutch his prey, despite all day of the best of me why the bird clings to its mate, and the chicken runs to seek shelter near its mother? I can not-I only know that I love him. He is a bad man—a bold, bad man-but I knew not this at fitteen; and then he said soft words to me, and his eyes looked love, and he smiled, and his voice was gentle, and -and -I loved him. What then that I know he loves another—that he would week her, and not me? I can not alter it. I hate and love him both. Now leve is uppermost; but hate may be one day, and then-"

"What then?" sneered Ralph

Never mind; here comes the peddler."

"Hilio! Leave the old hoss in the little in the Pretending not to know the peddier, who had never been up there before; "jist in time for supper;

come doon country?"

"Well," replied the other, a down-east Yankee, "I are; I've been doin' a considerable slick trade; got in the browns mighty well. Sold yup considerable figure supper is ready, 'cause I'm famished and tired."

They had now reached the top of the steps. Kate was looking hard at Raiph Regin, in whose eyes, even in that twilight, she expression.

expression. "Give me your bags and let me show you a room," said she, ab-THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY. the same of the same of the same of the same of ----

The rache was large and airy. A large tireplace, which admitted of benches within its ample dimensions, was occupied by a huge iron pot and a turkey roasting. A war in the first firsty, s i. . what stout, handsome still but for a wild and savage expression, was reparing the evening meal. A it is a second to the contract of crockery, a bar filled with colored bottles, a huge table, several chairs and stools, guns, hams, sides of bacon hanging round the walls, with two windows and many doors, completed the scene.

"I guess that smells fine," said the peddler, rubbing his hands.

had lately, then?" asked Ralph.

"Nothin' solid or pleasant birds and dry jerked beef."

farin' yar, so turn to; we're all at home."

All sat down-the woman, who had black hair and eyes, and tawdry finery, and a coral necklace, and a watch, and a dirty lace cap, at the head, Ralph Regin at the end of the table, Kate and the peddler opposite the fire. The supper was Plentiful and well cooked. There was liquor in pienty, and the peddler, who was very weary, ate his meal in silence, swallowed a horn of corn-juine, lit his old pipe, and stretch. himself on a bench by the fire. Kate helped to clear away, and then sat down also, and took up a book-a strange thing up there, and yet there were many in that house, for Mrs. Regin had been almost a lady once, and had, despite crime and guitt, almosted her chird up to a certain time. strile, offer - ... ... .... boons as he : . . . . I hourd sont in the little to be a little of the land of the land, which the la a single leaf of her book, and who had been watching every mo-, tion and look of the man who called himself her father, also lit a candle and went to bed. Her room was beside that of the peddier, but on a level with the kitchen.

"Now, Martha," said Ralph Regin, in a low, hushed voice, hissed forth from between his teeth, "that peddler's box is full of dollars and watches. He must bleep in the pool."

"No more murter," replied the woman, sinking into a chair, and hiding him from her with her hands.

"Hush! the girl may be listening!"

And Ralph rose, crawled across the room, but stopped as he heard Kate singing merrily at her window.

CHAPTER VII.

THE INDIAN VILLAGE.

When Custaloga left his companion in that wild gully of the woods, he began his journey with all that caution and circumspection for which his race have so long been widely eelebrated. His ear drank in every sound, he trod the woods with the lightness of a fawn, his feet scarcely stirred the leaves and twigs which covered the ground, and his arms were so held as to avoid all chance of conis twich the trees.

There was something singularly solemn in the aspect of the forest through which the red-man glided noiselessly, stealthily, as a snake does through the tall prairie or the thick under-brush. For in the section and the section of the stream. This, however, he crossed at the first convenient til minning, and plant of the printo the forest itself. It now became i.u., a matter of winder how he the limself, how he found his Way. Al War de Pichery Herrich ... night. There was not a sound festations, in fact, of Indian life.

to tell that nature was not deed. Not an owl hooted, not a wild beast was heard to roar; and the gentle sighing of trees in the light air that pravailed, was all that told that nature still lived and ruled creation.

But Custaloga moved along with the unerring instinct of a woodman, one of the first features of whose wooderaft was to find his way where no man else could titude him tit. While a come inch become in some degree accustomed to the forest and the prairie, it is singular with what case he penetrates in a direct line through wilds where there seems no guide.

But the moss on the trees, the pebbles in the path, the color of the bark, the twinkling of a star, the point of a rock, are indications to the hunter as sure as sign-post or road. As, however, Custaloga proceeded, he slackened his pace, until at last he paused, look a round, and then seated himself at the foot of a tree. He was now on the summit of a gentle slope, very thickly wooded, but with scarcely any tander and the of har and Custaloga had rested himself for about five minutes, and had in that time gained breath and considered the course now to be adopted. He began be billion bit tilled in the a tree, whence he could easily snatch it, but where, from several trunks being together, no one confid very cashly some it in particular

He then any i'd ou his he and ear to the ground. The change from the stillness of night in that glaciny flicted to will be the leard, was very singular and striking. He seemed quite surrounded by busy life, by some phantasma-! ear muranuring, whispering, buzz-ine gentle wind which prevailed came up the slope, and brought with it sounds of warriors gravely ..... .. of Over the finite - and the last hand and and and are

"Ugh," muttered Custaloga, whose Wyandot caution had served him well.

Generally speaking, it would have been quite safe for the Indian warrior to have approached the camp of the Shawnees at that advanced hour of the night without many precautions, the Indians not being in the habit of sitting up much after dark. But, on the present occasion, something out of the common doubtless made them more than usually excited, and Custaloga at once made up his mind that it was, as he had expected, to this village Amy had been brought, and that the warriors were telling the stories and narratives of their adventures while smoking their pipes over the campfires.

Having gone so far and learned so much, the Wyandot was not a man to retreat without making sure of the fact he was so deeply. anxions to know, and by which he intended guiding his future proceedings. Instead, therefore, of retreating when he discovered that the Indians had not retired to the shelter of their wigwams, he merely determined to act with extreme eaution and circumspection, clearly, however, showing, that he did not intend to retreat. He now kept nothing on him but the small breech-cloth of the Shawnee warrior on the war-path, fastened his hunting-knife in his belt, tightened the thongs of his moccasins, and began quietly descending the slope toward the village. It was a position and an hour which would have sorely tried the nerves of any, save a borderman or an ingian.

He had advanced a hundred yards before the voices, which had been so plain above when he lay on the ground, became again audible. He now seemed a vision of the night, so solemnly did he stalk on toward the edge of the clearing. In a few minutes he stood as near as was consistent with safety to the Indian village of Wya-na-mah, a kind of outpost of Chillicothe.

A large, natural opening in the forest, where an arid soil or some accident had prevented the thick growth of trees, or which in days gone by had been cleared, had been selected by the Shawnees for their town. About thirty wigwams had been arranged in a semicircle round an open grass-plot, much worn, however, and stubbly; and behind these a rude stockade was visible, which also extended round in front, leaving only two entrances to the village, which were guarded by hungry dogs.

There were two fires on the open plot in the center, round one of which about twenty warriors were collected, while as many women and girls were congregated near the other.

It was a wild and singular scene. Around, the dark and gloomy forest; above, the sky, now illumined by the rising moon; and there, the conical huts of the terrible red-skins lying still and yet marked in the moolight; and their owners, those grim and ghastly warriors who during that day had wrought so much evil and done so much mischief-mischief never to be forgotten-sitting there like peaceful citizens in their pleasant homesteads, talking, laughing, chattering, thus at eventide, without any of that gravity and solemnity assumed at times for a purpose. It was truly a subject for the pencil of a Murillo ora Claude. And the merry group of girls, and the sedate and sad women, were, with the children, the dogs, and the other little addenda of the scene, singularly picturesque.

Custaloga stood in the deep shadow of the trees, about thirty yards from the fire around which the women were congregated. It was evident, from the stockade being, in some instances, built close up to the trees, which thus could easily have afforded dangerous cover to the lurking foe, that the Indians considered themselves tolerably secure up in Wya-na-mah or that they trusted chiefly to their scouts outlying in the forest.

And Custaloga looked in vain, amid that group of tawny girls and bowed and chastened women, for the form of Amy. His quick and piercing eyes wandered everywhere around the camp, but not a sign of her existence could be seen in any direction, nor of any thing else which that day had been stolen from the Crow's Nest, the property of the Silent Hunter.

Still, from a few words he was able to distinguish, he was satisfied that Amy was concealed in one of the huts; but his determination was so great to be certain of this fact, that, utterly disregarding all ideas of danger, he determined to enter the camp itself before he departed, and satisfy himself upon this point. The manner of Custaloga was not at this instant that of an Indian warrior. He seemed rather one of the children of the pale-faces, so impatient did he appear.

But with a shake of the head he kept down the rising feeling of boyish impatience which had moved him, and stood close to the tree which afforded him shelter—so closely, indeed, that he seemed part and parcel of it. He appeared a statue, not a man; so motionless, so upright, and yet so graceful was his mien.

He listened to the talk of the girls, he heard the guttural tones of the warriors, the bark of the dogs over their bones, and then suddenly he started, despite his self-possession, as a howl resounded through the forest—a wail, a howl of woe, uttered by one long practiced in such screeching. A deathlike pause ensued, the warriors were all silent, the girls laughed no more, as all waited for the explanation of this noise.

A woman came staggering from out a wigwam, her hair disheveled, To be a temahawk in her hand, and ad- 143, an vanced, still howling and wailing, Novel.

toward the warriors, who rose to receive her with a marked politeness which would have done credit to the most civilized society. Having reached the group, she halted, and was immediately inclosed by the circle of women, who kept at a respectful distance, still near enough to hear distinctly. Custaloga himself felt inclined to advance; but he contented himself with gliding forward to another tree, and then stood still, leaning forward, listening with rapt attention.

"Cosama was a brave-no hunter," she began, "ever made his wigwam warmer, or kept it better supplied with meat-he was never the last on the war-path, his cry was always heard on the battlefield; his wife and little ones were happy, for they knew the husband and father was a brave. And where is Cosama now? Is his voice heard at the council-fire to-night? Will his cry ever wake the echoes in the forest again? No. He went forth, on the first day of the moon, to fight the sneaking pale-faces, and yesterday he fell into an ambush, and the great warrior, Cosama the brave, the Quivering Spear, died by the hand of a squaw. Wah! The wigwam of Rice-stalk is empty; no more shall the voice of Cosama bid his weman go fetch the game in the forest; no more shall his boy run to meet him on the edge of the wood, and learn to be a brave at the sound of his voice, Cosama was a brave, but he died by the hand of a squaw. A woman of the pale faces is in yonder tent, a pappoose is by her side; they are alive, and Cosama is unavenged."

Custaioga shuddered, clutched his knife, and drew back for a bound. His eyes glared, his form seemed to swell, and one would have said he was about to do reckless battle with the whole tribe.

To be continued in Dime Novel 143, and in addition to a complete Novel.

BEADLES

Standard Dime Publications

MOVELS SERIES.

L. Milania

L The Privateer's Cruise.

Myra the Child of Adoption.

Alaco Wilder

. The Golden Balt.

Chip, the Care Child.

- The Review of Ta-

4 Seth Jones.

*- The Stave Scalpter.

The Backwoods Bride.

IL The Prisoner of La Vintrasse. Bill Bidden, the Trapper.

M. Colar Swamp.

of The Emerald Necklare.

12. The Frontier Angel. Is. Unrie Exchiel.

17. Madge Welde.

to Nat Took.

F. Manualis's Daughter.

to . or, the live Will

St. Spill Charge

22 Nor Maid of Esopon.

22 Minifred Winthrop-

To Trail Hunters. S. The Peop Prince.

The Brezhman of the Coast.

The Daughter of Liberty.

Ning Burnaby.

I a Firest Spy. Satasam Pounfort's Ward.

the Double Hero.

Some, or, Life on the Border

Marco Guinea. (70 caula.)

RING MATROTTO

Bust and West. The Riffernoon of the Mismi-

Madhold, the Spy-

The Wrong Mau-

Fire Land Claim. Abs. Unionist's Daughter. (Dor.)

the Hunter's Cabic.

Alber King's Man.

The Alberta.

Agrees Falkland

Eather; or, the Oregon Trail.

The Wreck of the Albion.

From Beauthle's Churge. Consumpter, the Huron.

Fran Gold Hunters

by The Black Ship.

Ol. The Two Guarda.

52. Single Eye.

St. Huter and Lores.

54. Myrtle, the Child of the Prairie. St. Off and On.

Mr. Almo's Plot.

57. The Scout.

St. The Med Hunter.

St. Kent, the Ranger.

for Jo Daviess' Client. Laughing Eyes.

62 The Unknown.

CL The Indian Princess.

ed. The Rangers of the Mohawk.

St. The Wrocker's Press.

65. The Hunter's Vow.

67 Indian Jim-

63. The Brigastine. 68. Black Hollow.

The Indian Queen.

The Loss Tvall

2. The Morse Hunter.

2. The Silver Bugla.

The Cruiser of the Chempeake. | 5, The Messenger.

16. The Hunter's Escape.

76. The Scout's Prize.

77. Quindaro,

18. The Rival Scouts.

79. The Schuylkill Rangers.

80. Esgle Eye.

51. The Two Hunters.

20. The Mystic Canon.

83. The Golden Harpoon.

54. The Seminule Chief.

85. The Fagitives.

en. Red Plume.

57. On the Deep.

3. Captain Molly. 89. Star Eyes.

50. Cast Away.

91. The Lost Cache.

23. The Twin Scouts.

93. The Creole Staters.

94. The Mad Shipper.

95. Eph Peters.

96. Little Moccasin.

91. The Doomed Hunter.

29. Rath Harland.

99. Overhoard.

100, Karaiba.

101. The Maid of Wyoming.

102. Hearts Porever.

103. Big Foot, the Guide.

104. Guilty or Not Guilty.

105. The Man in Green,

106. Sample Phil.

107. The Peddler Spy.

108, The Loss Ship.

109. Kidnapped.

110. The Hidden Home.

Ill. The Shawneer' Fue.

117. The Falcon Rover.

113. Rattlepale.

114. Yes Starting. 115. The Soon of Liberty.

136. Port at Last. 117. The Mobeyan Maiden.

118. The Water Wast.

119. The Five Champions.

120. The Hunchbeck. 121. The Vailed Benefactress.

122. Barden, the Ranger.

1931. The Missing Bride. 174. Sumter's Scouts.

125. The Hunted Liig.

136. Old Jupe. 127. Rald Engle.

126. The touich Miners.

129. Blackeves.

L30. Brave Heart. 131. The Wrecker's Daughter.

132. Old Honesty.

IEL Yankee Eph.

154. Foul-weather Jack.

105 The Cheroken Chist. 138. The Indian-Hunters.

lor. The Traiter Spy-

138. Tim, the Scout-

139. The Border Free.

140. Sheet-Anchor Tum.

161. The Helpless Hand.

LIBRARY.

The White-faced Paror.

2. The Blacksmith of Antwerp. it. The Maiden Martyr.

4. The Loyalist.

5. The Country Cousin.

FIGTION.

1. The Marked Bullet.

L. The Outlaw Brothers. 3. The Willing Captive

4. The Deer Hunters.

The Dacotah Queen.

8. Missing Jo-

Gottilish Gottsoock.

2. Prairie Chick.

a, Roving Ben.

BIDGRAPHIES.

1. Garibaldi.

Daniel Boone

3. Kit Carson.

4. Anthony Wayne.

5. David Crockstt.

6 Winneld Stott,

7. Pontinc.

a John C. Fremont,

9 John Paul Jones.

100 Marquis de Lainyette.

11 Tecumseb.

12. General George R McClallan. 13. Parson Brownlow.

14 Abraham Lincoln.

15. Ulysses S. Grant. MEN OF THE TIME, NOL 1, 2 and 3,

SCHOOL SERIES.

L. American Speaker,

2. National Speaker. & Patriotic Speaker.

4. Comic Speaker.

5. Elecutionist.

6. Humprona Speaker. 7. Standard Speaker.

Districtes, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 5 and 6.

Metodint. School Mulodist.

HAND-BOOKS OF GAMES.

Guide to Curling and Skating

Yachting and Rowing.

Riding and Driving.

Chess Instructor Book of Cricket and Foot-ball.

Base-Ball Player for 1867. Golde to Swinnedng. Book of Croquet.

FAMILY SERIES.

1. Cook Book.

2. Recipe Book.

A. Housewite's Manual. 4. Family Physician.

5. Dressmaking and Millinery. POPULAR HAND-BOOKS.

1. Letter-Writer. 2. Book of Etiquette.

3. Book of Verses. 4. Book of Dreams

SONG BOOKS. Song Books, Nos. 1 to 20.

Pocket Songsters, Nos. I to a. MISCELLANEOUS,

Dime Tales, Nos, 1 to 12 Grant's and Sherman's Reports. Books of Fon, Nos 1, 2 and 3. Rubinson Crusce, (Illustrated).

The New House that Jack Built,

For sale by all Newsdealers; or sent, rost-ram, to any address, on receipt of price-ten cants mach.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 118 William St., N. Y.

BEADLE'S DIME PUBLICATIONS.

What is said of them by Competent Judges.

We were agreeably anrorised, on looking over the series of these works, to find how much excellent matter is given for that now defunct article, the dime, but still purchaseable at ten cents. History, Fiction, and Useful Works—come of which are suitable for Schools—are to be found in this remarkably cheap series of publications. Of one thing we can assure our readers—that nothing immoral, or of a slang nature, is published in them. So, if you want a cheap and good ten cents' worth, get one of Bradle's Dime Books.—Louis A. Godey, Godey's Lady's Books.—Louis A. Godey, Godey's Lady's Books.—Louis A. Godey, Godey's Lady's Books.—Louis A. Godey, Godey's Lady's

One of the most successful enterprises of modern times in the literary world was inaugurated with the introduction of the "Dime" publications of the wellknown firm of Beadle and Company. * * Their success has been unprecedented, but not undeserved, for we believe it has been their conscientions aim to cultivate the popular taste up to a higher standard of literature than was the case before they took the field. Yellow-covered literature was therefore so aptly described as " cheap and nasty;" but the publications of this house, though the cheapest of the cheap, have proved that that desirable quality is not inconsistent with a high order of literary merit, and an ivreproachable standard of morality. - But-Talo Commercial Advertiser.

Why these works, (Beadle's Dime Books), are popular is a problem, quite as much for the moralist and student of national character as for the critic. It is a satisfaction that, being so, they are, without exception, so far as we can judge, unexceptionably moral. * They do not even obscurely pander to vice, or excite the passions.—North American Review, July, 1864.

These works are of a high moral character, and are written in a popular and entertaining style. They are certain to find their way into the home circle, and when once they have made room for themselves in the English heart, they are certain to find an ever-ready welcome.—

London (England) American.

Since the time that Fenimore Cooper wrote his Indian tales, few works of fiction have excited greater attention or given greater satisfaction to the reader amount of into those works of the above deceased author dallylle, Ind.

which have won for him a world-wooled-brity. The indian and genuine X we kee character, together with that of a sturdy backwoodsman and settler, graphically drawn—Examiner, Bright England.

Beadle and Company deserve all creations as in no case have they allowed a work of poisonous character to pass through their hands to the public. Evil is not glassic over in any instance with a venceri virtue, to mimic the genuine. A general observation on American light literature will apply to the publications of Beadle and Company. Rondout, N. Y., Contrier.

In his series of Dime Publication's Beadle has struck upon a new path—so once excellent and original. By the means he has brought much of the very best of our current literature with the reach of all. His publications of brace History, Biography, Adventure at Romance, and nothing of a worthless of immoral tendency is issued from his presses.—Perrysburg, O., Journal.

Beadle's Dime Publications, by their combined cheapness, excellence and beauty, have become familiar to the American public. They are, donbiles the most popular series of books ever les sued in this country. This popular, " due quite as much to the high stancing of merit maintained in each work as to the exceeding cheapness of the little volumes. Literary and moral excellence are primary requisites for all contributions to the series, as well as dramatic interest, power and beauty of story. Hence the popularity and permanent value of these now conceded household and public favorites; and the general reader, the teacher, the parent and the scholar, may rest assured that in security any of Beadle's publications, they base what will prove eminently satisfactors. -Mt. Ourmel (Ill.) Register.

The wonder is how they can afford to furnish so much for so little; but they do, upon receipt of the sum designated.— Gazette, Williamsport, Pa.

The publishers are issuing a series of Dime Books, which contains a large amount of interesting and useful reading, at a very small expense.—Standard, Kendallville, Ind.